This innusual reticence upon the greatest of following the surrender of Johnson's army. The rebellion had fallen as if struck down by lightning, and the people everywhere were depressed, and utterly broken in spirit. They felt themselves wholly in the power of our authorities, and had not then reasoned themselves into the belief that they had committed no wrong. They then looked upon themselves as meriting punishment, and expected it. Any policy then laid dawn with firmness would have been received, and all would have submitted at once and willingly. But the crash passed and the people began to recover. They heard with astonishment that half the North was crying out for a lenient policy, for speedy and complete forgiveness. They heard Northern orators gravely asserting that treason could not be punished, and that all questions of national policy affecting the States must be left to them for decision; that the troops should be withdrawn; that kindness, and mercy, and conciliation alone must mark the acts of the Government. This was the fatal moment in all that concerned reconstruction. The old pride returned, the old ideas of superiority were awakened, the prospects of regaining political place and power flashed into the minds of the politicians, and having received an inch from the authorities, they speedily grasped the yard, and where the Government was slow to move, they occupied the vantage ground themselves, and now hold a position from which they have opened a campaign against the Government that promises well for them. Heaceforth it will be no secret war, but open opposition, through the forms of law, to the whole advance in public sentiment which the war has brought about at the North. LEVI B. DUFF, of Allegany.

This is conceded by the President himself, but yet ithe work of reorganization goes on quietly on his particular plan, and every arrangement is being made to bring the united delegations of all these States to the doors of Congress at the opening of the next seasion. That he will feel pledged to support them is taken for granted by all of them. They will expect no leas when they come on his invitation and in his particular way. If he does they will be admitted, unless the people, instead of waiting, will take up the cue in advance and bring such an opinion to bear inpon it now, as will accure the fidelity of their representatives.

We invite attention to it; for if anything we said can be so construed as to reflect upon the faith fulness of such revenue officers as Mr. WHITE, or any in these districts, nothing could give us more pleasure than to remove such impress of their representatives.

The events of the last session, with General Ranks at Washington, pressing the admission of the Louisians members under the suspices of the Government—and this, too, after Congress had-asserted its own jurisdiction by the passage of a bill which was not approved—ought to settle the question whether it is safe to await the assemblage of that body.

Once back, however, what is the first consequence to ourselves? An immediate renewal of the old coalition upon the basis of a repudiation of the national dest, beginning with a refusal to lay the necessary taxes for the payment of the interest. Taxation is always unpopular. What better argument for the overthrow of the Republican party than the promise of relief, if not the suicidal folly of hurrying back the traitors themselves to assist us in adjusting and settling the accounts of the war? To do this thing would convict us of incapacity to govern.

Some people may think these fears are idle. If they will look, however, into the leading Demorratic papers of the interior for the last three years, they will ind it descried again and again that the war was unrighteous—that the loans made to carry it on were unlawful and ought not to be paid—and that the securities were worthless. There is buttone thing that can save us, and that is the seasonable intervention of the public creditor. The public securities are so widely diffused that he is now a power in the land. The politicians are into to be trusted. All their hopes and tears are in the direction of Washington. And there will be no Convention, where they have the rule, that will dare to whisper a remonstrance. And so too with Congress. They would have failed at the last season, if it had endured a little longer. To wait on them is death—and three is no way of making absolutely sure of securing their fidelity to the people but by such a demonstration in advance throughout the several States, as will enable them to understand that they will be expected to do their duty, or to suffer the direct consequences in the event of rities, and of course to our entire financial system, which is based upon them, should the same old spirit which brought about secession gain full ascendancy in the South, and, conjoined with the remains of copper-INTELES a hint:

"During the next twelve months this state will want at least two hundred thousand dollars worth of ploughs, and as many more of the various implements necessary for successful farming. To these add one hundred thousand more for carriages, wagons, &c. Then it will require fifty thousand to supply, wooden ware, such as tubs, buckets, palls, barrels, &c., &c., and fifty thousand more to supply candles and soap, while two hundred thousand will hardly be sufficient to furnish sheek for our population. Thus it will be seen that we expend nearly a million of dollars for these few articles."

Nearly all the states lately in rebellion are olins, and the above enumeration does not comprehend a tythe of the articles needed by the southern people, and which they must have if it be by the sacrifice of half their landed property, and all their surplus products to obtain the means of purchase.

Never was a fairer field offered for enterprising agents of manufactures to operate in.
