While Former, Socretaries.

The order declaring the late municipal election in Richmond null and void is an important and very significant incident in the history of the times. It was a strong mes sure certainly, but perfectly justifiable if not unavoldable. It was a test question between loyalty and treason: for it is notorielection based their claims mon their former devotion to the cause of the Confederacy and their continued hostility to the rule of the Government of the United States. The manner in which that election was conduted was a bold and studied defiance of the national authority, and was tantamount to a declaration of independence, and was manifestly so intended.

It was well on the part of our authorities to give those people-who had clearly for feited by their rebellion every constitutional right they ever had—an opportunity ted by their rebellion every constitu to put themselves right if they had any de sire to do so. This they could have done by choosing men to office who had at least some shadow of claim to the character o loyal men. But their conduct was the very site of this, and they took especial pains to make it as offensively so as possible. Very well, they have been on probation and have proved recreant; weighed in the balance and found wanting, and now we suppose they will have to be content with a military government for their city. The country and the world would justify this course now; but had this test of the temper and spirit of those people not been afforded, remain have been difficult to have justified the continuance of martial law in a community in which all forcible opposition to the government had ceased, and where the mass of the people were crowding the halls in which oaths of allegiance were administered. This election, and the bold defiant spirit in which it was conducted, has shown to the food people of the construction of the country. it might have been difficult to have justishown to the loval people of the country Richmond only, but all Virginia, shall be even years, these incorrigible rebels will President has given them a fair chance but they persist in glorying in their gree crime, and in hurling insult and defiance in the face of the government. There remains, therefore, no alternative but to deal

BIORE BLAST FURNACES. Messrs. Shoennenges & Co., are erect ing two large sized smelting furnaces jus below their well-known iron works in the Fifth ward. Their furnace lot has fronts of 301 feet on the Allegheny river and on Eina street, and is 142 feet deep from Eina street, and is 142 feet deep from Eina street to the river. It is surrounded by a substantial stone wall and the part appropriated to the furnaces and casting house priated to the furnaces and casting house has been considerably, eldvated by filling. The work is pretty far advanced and is progressing rapidly, under the superintendence of Mr. Jacon Bucs. Everything about these works is of the most complete and substantial kind.

The business of smelling iron from the ore is comparatively a new one in this city and its vicinity, but it bids fair to become very large. The Like Superior region furnishes the larger portion of the ore, and will prebably continue to do so, but a considerable quantity is brought from the Iron Mountain, Pilot Knob and other great mines of Missouri. These ores are so rich below their well-known iron works in the

It is said the facts will be officially anamneed in a few days. The causes that led to this action are only guessed at. I am of opinion that he has been crowded out by outside influences. He originally owned the entire property of the Tribons, but in an evil hour transforms it into a joint stock company. He retained, however, the control of the paper by contract, but what does a contract amount to, when one of the contracting parties enters it for the sole purpose of accomplishing its ultimate vecation?

France would not have thought of but for our domestic troubles, it was therefore unfriendly to us; and our government, should at least give all our moral force in aid of the natives against the French,"

The following letter, written by a nobl young lady, will be read with interest. The South used to have one "peculiar institu tion"-Slavery; the North has long had and yet has another-Free Schools. The first has been swept away; but no sooner is that done than the other goes in to fill up the vold. RICHMOND, July 10, 1865.—To the Editor of the National Republican—Dean Sire—It was, my privilege, as you know, to spend the Easter holidays in Richmond. The ladies of the Freedmen's Ald Society arrived about the same time, and were soon actively engaged in their excellent work. But the little, helpless children of the poor whites, too young for usefulness, were lying about the pavement, in front of the Commission Room in ragged, wretched-looking groups, shivering, crowding the sunny spots, and occasionally begging for a child's paper, with A. B. O's in it. It was then suggested that these little ones should be gathered in, and free schools organized. The work was commenced at once, by C. Thurston Chase, Esq., the practical, efficient worker in this matter.

July finds me again in Richmond, and two, cod schools, one numbering one hundred pupils (grits), another one hundred and thirty (boys,) are now in successful operation, in two churches, on Oregon Hill, some of the chelidren coming more than two miles for the practous instruction.

It is the cherished desire of our Union President, "tried and true," to elevate the condition of the poor whites of the South, and is not this movement in Richmond beginning at the beginning? Is it not good work to teach any child enough of arithmetic to prevent his being cheated, to write his own letters and receipts, and above all, to read his own Bible, so that the way of salvation may be open to him?

I abhor treason, and constantly pass traitors with as much indifference as if they were not human, except when a sudden thought of "Habby." "Castle Thunder" or

I abhor treason, and constantly pass traitors with as much indifference as if they were not human, except when a sudden thought of "Hebby," "Gastle Thunder" or "Belle Blet," wakes up within me a feeling of bitterness towards them which I can scarcely repress. But the little innocent children—the purest, sweetest things in Richmond—how my heart yearns to them. Are they to be left to grow up in ignorance, benighted enough to be rushed blindly into another such war? God forbid! I appeal to every benevolent heart in the land.

It seems inredible, but it is true, that this movement is bitterly opposed by the self-styled aristocracy here, who declare they will never pay a dollar's taxes in support of free schools! To the North then belongs the great work of gratitutious ininstitutions throughout the continent.

About the middle of August I hope to be back in my own school in Philadelphia preparatory to the re-opening in September, where I shall be glad to receive money or school-books for the cause, as other schools are now in course of preparation.

I remain, very respectfully.

MARY E. THROPP, 1841 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

An Unpardoned Rebelin Favor of Negro The Montreal Gazette publishes a long letter from ex-Senator Foote, who first seceded from the Union and then from the Confederacy, and who is now in Canada. Mr. Foote takes a sorrowful review of the past career of the South, and says:

past career of the South, and says:

We scouted all the counsels then supplied to us; we despised the language of timely admonition; we madly kept up the fires of sectional excitement, plling upon them from time to time, such inflammable rubbish as Kansas-Nebraska bills, Lecompton Constitutions, and aggressive Democratic Presidential platforms, and lo! the evil tree which we planted, has borne poisonous fruit, the taste of which has been death inevitable!

Slayery in North America is clearly now at an end, and its future revival: is just as impossible as it would be to call up the mouldering dead from the graves where they sleep and to endue them anew with their former vitality and vigor. The sooner we we of the South fully realize this fact, the better it will be for ourselves and for our whole country.

We must, in order to be free ourselves, agree never hereafter to interfere with the freedom of others. We must amend our Siete Constitution as soon as possible, and embody therein our comsent that the four millions of bond-men and bond-women heretofore existing upon Southern soil shall be henceforth asfree in all respects as those of the white race who lately dominated over them; in other words, we must formally recognize the state of things already existing, and blind ourselves to do nothing to disturb it in all future time. We must, in order to a source our work return to liberty and happiness, not only recognize the cofored denizens of the South as now-free, but we must allow them the same means of preserving them to take an oath of loyalty as a pre-requisite to the exercise of their ministernal functions.

OF LORD BROUGHAM a London letter says: "His face has become thin and withered; his nose and chin are making near acquaintance; his frame is bent; and when he walked—which he did all the time, no matter who was speaking—it was with steps two or three inches at a time. As he went about, various Lords came and took his hands; land upon every occasion he had to have the name whispered in his ear, upon which he would shake the hand he held again and again, continuing the process to what must have been a very uncomfortable extent I should think. In short, if the old man's mind is (as I should think from his recent voluminous absurdines) as doubled up and shaky as his body is, I think we may have reason to deal tenderly with his sally speeches about America."

From the New York census it is estimated that the aggregate population of the State will prove to be four millions three hundred and fifty thousand. The tendency of population, as has been since the construction of milroads, is toward the commercial centres; and hence there is a large increase in most of the cities, and a relative diminution in the rural counter.

The steamer Lillie Martin, from the mouth of the Marin's river, aix miles below Fort Benton, reports hostile Indians all along the Upper Missouri. Only four boats got through to Fort Benton with their freight, in consequence of the low water. Fully four thousand tons of freight is now on the river. The legion was composed of scoundrels and convicts from almost every nation in Europe. It is said they were withdrawn from Matamoras to prevent desertion, as fully one half the number originally stationed over the river ran away. There are now no foreign troops at Matamoras. The garrison consists of about three thousand inefficient Mexicana.
