Recently it is believed, the Pope contemplates assembling the largest gathering of Roman Catholic laynen the world has ever seen. A leading religious journal calls attention to a few religious journal calls attention to a few representative facts in the history of the nineteenth century, in which it is shown the important labors of the laymen have contributed largely to the present strength of the Papal Church. Looking back to less than a half century, when the leading Pro-testant Churches began to reap the first fruits from missionary scielies, intelligent and zealous Roman Catholics looked with amazement at the grand results. It was soon discovered that the unorganized ap-ipeals of bishops and priests failed in a great measure to accomplish similar results. Forthwith a Catholic society of a similar results character in many respects, called the Roman Ca'holic Society for the Propaga ion of the Faith, which has, since its origin, been largely under the administration of lay-men. Some years later the S. Vincent Association was established, chiefly for the support and education of the poor and the struggle for establishing political liber-ty and untrammeled freedom of the Church, the first Catholic Congress for the support and education of the poor and the struggle for establishing political liber-ty and untrammeled freedom of the Church, the first Catholic Congress for the cally and effectually the lay force of the church was inangurated.
