The Titusville "grald commenting on the scenes of violence and crime of daily occurrence Gen. Blanks, in a speech at Charlestown, Mass. vindicating his military career, made the following statement in regard to cotton speculations in the Red river expedition:

If was proud to say also that during these six weeks no sudder or oilleer of the army entered into any appeculations or received any personal profit from the product of the country. This was done only by the officers of the navy, who organized the marinus as working parties, going into the interior six or eight miles to seize and capture cotton. Before entering upon this expedition be notified his officers in writing, that no property would be allywed to come out of that country that was not turned over to the Tensaury officers of the United States, and that order was strictly obeyed.
