The rebel States beng prostrate, cannot be put upon their feet sgain, except by us, and it is in our power to make the platform on which they shall stand. They can have no politcal power in the future, except such as we choose to give them. This is the radica stand-point, and the President admits it.

in all its length and breath. the power to dictate the terms of reconstruction being thus unquestioned, it becomes simply a question of expediency, sent anything but the sentiment of the Re not of right, bow far and upon what ques flons their power shall be exercised. The President and the Radicals agree that the abolition of slavery and the repudiation of the rebel debt should be exacted of them; but while the radicals think that manhood suffrage should also be exacted, the Presi Department of this Government. All she dent is unwilling to press it at this stage of has to rely on is her Representatives in the work. But this, we repeat, the President himself being judge, is simply a questioned by the property of th tion of expediency, and not of right.

"It is better" the President says, "to let them reconstruct themselves, than to force them to it;" adding "for, if they go wrong litical Issue of the day, will not raise him them reconstruct themselves, than to force the power is in our hands, we can check them at any stage, to the end, and oblige them is terribly afiald of offending the South, to correct their errors." The "we," here, we take to mean the Government—Conmust not exact anything from the rebels gress and the President; and with this broad eclaration of the plenary power of the gov. do what is right, in reconstructing themselves, there is no escape from the conclusion that the government can, if it chooses to exercise the power, compel them to councede Manhood Suffrage and the equality of of the South." Oh, dear! And so, after But while thus conceding the correctness of the Radical ground, and the fullness of the power of the government to dictate the jerms of reconstruction, the President goes do anything in restoring the Union that on to say: "If I interfered with the vote would be unpleasant to the white rebels in the rebel States to dictate that the negro shall vote, I might do the same thing for ny own purposes in Pennsylvania." It loes not follow; Pennsylvania did not reoel, nor has she ever lost her rights, as the ebel States have done. She does not lie costrated, as he says they do. She does or the government any power over her. There is all the difference in the world beween the two. The government can dicate terms to the rebel States, because they sacrificed all their rights in trying to get the Union, and it cannot do that to tennsylvania, because she has never sacrificed any of her rights The premises, herefore, being unsound, the conclusion sequally so. We do not, however, intend to argue his question, now. Our principal object is o note clearly that the Presidential recondruction scheme of to-day is not the resto. ation scheme of a few weeks ago, but is a oncession and an assertion of the entire ower over the reconstructing States which radicals bave claimed. The President's fear that the concession manhood suffrage would breed a war of aces is a groundless one. We have no bt he entertains it honestly and seriousy, but it is nevertheless groundless. The should not only consult, but be guided by the likes or dishkes of rebels and criminals, kely to breed a war of races than the conession of it. There is never any damage n doing right; although many good men ave allowed themselves to be frightened the consequences of doing a righteons We are glad however, to note, that the resident is willing to make a beginning aid to confer the right to vote upon a poron of the negroes. If the Southern States how themselves liberal enough to concede an this slight footbold to the negro, they I find it much easier than otherwise to back into the Union. TITSBURGH & CONNELLSVILLE
