The London Times says that it is impossible for the American Government to abandon the claims for the depredations of the Alebama, but it is quite possible for a Government to yield, yet do at thing. We must prepare to be told that the United Brates will yield its demands and will preserve the right of enforzing them, atill, when the temper of the people is cooled, when commerce has had time to renew the links which bind the two nations together, when the merits of the war has faded into the past, the little disposition for argression on the unfortunate will be over.

The Lordon Dally News confidently dismisses the supposition that the Alabama claims can become a direct cause of war between the two countries, but it trust that something will be done to brigg the dispute to an early practical estilement, for it is one which in no other way can be disposed of. It would be an eternal disgrace if both governments should confess themselves unable to flad any but a violent solution of their differences, but there is a a state of nominal peace, which has many of the disadrantage of war.

The liberation of the Captain and crow of the Shenandoah is said to have been unconditional, the British Government being of the opinion that there are no legal grounds upon which they could be detained. Captain Waddel, in a letter to Earl Russell, which is published, says:
