Triel of Richard Snaiden et al. lor the Murder of Cornelius Bresstlin. Count of Oten and Teasines .- Before

Judges Sterrett, Stowe and Brown.
Famer, Dec. 1.—Court met at the usual hour, when the arguments of counsel were resumed.

W. C. Morchand. Esq., continued his address. The evidence that the defendants went to the house of John Early for an unlawful purpose he considered conclusive. In all the disturbance that occurred; they were the aggressors, and if the jury believed that one of them indicted the fatal wound, the others present aiding and abeting, the jury must convict. It would not do that the fatal wound the convert. It would not do that you have because the Commonwealth could not say whether he particular man is or weather the say whether the particular man is or weather the converted to the particular man is or weather the converted to the particular man is or weather the converted to the particular man is or weather the converted to the particular man is or weather the converted to t first wound, the others present aiding and abeting, the jury must convict. It would not do to may that because the Commonwealth could not say who the particular man is or was that sheathed the kink in a pristalling breast, that therefore the defendants could not be conjucted. Such was not, the law, and if it ware, a premium would be set upon rowdyism. It had been said by counsel that there was no motive for killing Beristlin, he being the person present who administered mest to the enjoyment of these very selectaints, listead of being an argument for, it is directly against them, showing, as it did, the inter recklessness of the defendants: a determination upon their part, that they would helither hare man nor woman."

In conclusion Mr. Moreland said: "You must look, gentlemen, at the whole case, scanning closely the conduct of each and all the prisoners—you will look at them banded together, armed with dealify weapons, using threatening language, it citing to root, antions all erening for a quarrel, and from these conclude whether or not they, or either of them, acted wontonly, and maliciously in the commission of his horrible crime, and say whether these men. like pirates roving the bigh sea, are not "enemies to mankind." Fortunately, gentlemen, you are to be the umplies; #2forty your searching scratiny all the facts must pass in review; and, unmoved by passion or prejudice, your shall say whether the defendants are guilty or not guilty of the crime, and such the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, if the whole truth, and nothing

A few words upon the testimony in reference to certain alleged declarations of confession after the arrest of Norman Herrington. This eridence can have no affect upon any of the other defendants, whatever weight you may give it or consider it to have in the case of Herrington. And we caution you to put it entirely out of view, altigether ignore it, when you come to pass upon their cases.

In answer to the first point aubmitted by Mr. Marshall, counsel for defendant—"that in order to justify a conviction, the Commonwealth must prove that the doceased came to his death by the hand of one of the defendants, and the Commonwealth must show whose hand indicted the fatal blow, unless the cridence clearly establishes that the act of kulling was within the reasonable intendment of a common design previously formed by defendants"—was affrence by the Court, with this qualification and explanation.
