Pet. Centre, Saturday, Jan. 2. Wearing the Hair.

Attention has lately been drawn to the proof of the fickleness of the Goddess Fashion, which has been afforded by ladies' hair. It was remarked that the yellow Saxon tresses were at one time being everywhere thrust out of existence by the browns and blacks of the Newman type; but as an astonishing Saxon reaction shortly afterwards set in, society suddenly glittered with golden locks. Scarcely had we become accustomed to this metamorphosis before the reaction was followed by another. Golden hair was to be no longer the fashion; nothing would answer but the sombre charms of the brunette. The latest change, however, in the ever-varying mode, and we venture to hope it may be more permanent than the preceding ones, is to let the natural hue alone. It is somewhat singular that only one great nation ever left the hair in the natural state—the Greeks, the most artistic of all. They recognized that the lovely covering of the head was given for artistic handling alone—the vehicle of the stately human capital, the crown to the fair edifice of beauty.

Turkey has found an apologist and advocate in a London paper, the Evening Post. That journal is incessant in the idea of an antagonism subsisting of his time between the Cross and Crescent, and is quite surprised that the English sympathies "are by no means strong or as generous towards the Turk as they are toward the Christian." In this country we have a few newspapers which are equally exercised in behalf of the poor Indian, and who think it exceedingly hard that he is not allowed to stampede cattle and take all scalp a peace. It takes all sorts of people to make up a world.
