Anecdote of General Washington.

Washington had accepted an invitation from Arnold to breakfast with him at West Point on the very day the plot was discovered, but the General was prevented from keeping his engagement by what you call chance—by the earliest report of an old officer, near whose station they passed to spend the night there and inspect some works in the neighborhood. Next day while Washington, with his staff, including La Fayette, were seated at the table in the office of a quartermaster's assistant was brought to the American general, which he immediately opened and read, and laid it down without comment. No change was visible in his countenance, but he remained perfectly silent. Conversation dropped among his staff, and after some minutes, the general, beckoning La Fayette to follow him, passed to an inner apartment, for which the young friend without uttering a syllable, placed the fatal dispatch in his hands, and then, giving way to an ungovernable burst of feeling, fell on his neck and sobbed aloud. The effect produced on the young French marquis, accustomed to regard his general as cold and dignified in his usual manner—as devoid of the usual weakness of humanity—may be imagined. 'I believe,' said La Fayette in relating this anecdote, 'what this was the only occasion, throughout that long and sometimes hopeless struggle, that Washington ever gave way, even for a moment under a reverse of fortune; and perhaps I was the only human being who ever witnessed him in an exhibition so foreign to his temperament. As it was, he recovered himself before I had perceived the commotion that had given rise to his emotion; and when we returned to his staff not a tear remained on his countenance either of grief or despondency.'

"There now" said a little girl, while rummaging a drawer in a bureau, "greenbacks have gone to heaven without my agencies."

An anxious mother-in-law from Alaska, on her way to Philadelphia, was prevented by presenting him a bill for the bill at State.
