OIL CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

A meeting of the oil producers was held, pursuant to a call at Excelsior Hall, on Saturday, at 10 a. m. Among those present, we observed some of the heaviest producers of Venango county.

The interests of the producers and the obstacles to their success were thoroughly and ably discussed, and a determination evinced to place themselves on a footing such as the situation demands.

A committee of arrangements and permanent organization was appointed to report at the next meeting to be held at Titusville, on Friday, Feb. 12, at 2 p. m.

The gentlemen present at the meeting on Saturday, mean business, and from our personal acquaintance with some of the leading spirits in the movement, we confidently predict its success.

The London Mercantile Gazette bitterly denounces the Alabama claims treaty, saying: "It is so flagrantly one-sided it is difficult to imagine that the American Senate can seriously contemplate taking their stand upon it, or that the government at Washington can believe that any settlement of outstanding claims could possibly be accomplished.

The President of the State of Bolivia, in view of the impoverished condition of the treasury, and seeing the great necessity for studying economy during the present year, has decreed that the entire State troops be disbanded from the 31st of December inst.

A Millionaire made a Beggar.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Times, in a recent letter from Omaha, gives this strange story: "There are many strange reverses in this western life. There is at present stopping at this hotel a gentleman named Fenner, originally from Rochester, New York, who owns extensive mill and mining property in New Mexico.

He has been for several years. His property there is so extensive that when a freshet swept away $1,000,000 worth of it last spring, he could afford to laugh at it. In September last desiring to spend the winter East, he made up a train of several wagons, and with one American and seventeen Mexican greasers he started for Omaha through Kansas.

In about the centre of Kansas, some thirty miles west of Fort Dodge, his train was attacked by a body of 600 Indians. Unable to depend upon the greasers to fight, the two Americans, who were mounted on swift horses rode through the line of Indians and escaped.

Fenner was shot through the left breast, from the effects of which he has not recovered. The Indians then burned his train, which was worth $80,000, one half of it being in money in Fenner's trunk. They killed nine of the greasers, and the remainder escaped.

"In this manner Fenner lost all he had along except fifteen dollars in his vest pocket. He rode to Fort Dodge and remained some time in the hospital, at length making his way here penniless. He knew no one in this region and no one knew him.

He had sent his agent at Santa Fe for money, but it is a long way there, and communication is uncertain. Luckily, the other day, he met General Vaughn, who knew him in Santa Fe, and who, on hearing his misfortune, relieved his immediate wants.

He told the General that he had been five days in Omaha without food, and had elber walked the streets at night, or slept in sheds. No money to get food or lodging, and unable to get work such as his feeble condition would allow him to do, and he was too proud to beg. There was a man of great wealth at home in far distant New Mexico, reduced to beggary for the time by Indian malignity.

He is a man of intelligence and education, a first-rate civil engineer has served in the United States army, and is familiar with every portion of the West, clear to the Pacific. Vaughn interested friends in his behalf, and he will come out all right.

A Paris correspondent says that the celebrated Cura Pearl received for a New Year's gift from Prince Napoleon, an emerald necklace, worth a king's ransom, each emerald was wrapped in a bank note of a thousand francs. There are seventy emeralds. Prince Napoleon has lately paid assiduous court to this damsel, having given her his arm in public in all the principal theatres in Paris.

The Princess Clotilde, Prince Napoleon's wife, must be aware of her husband's infidelities, but she does not seem to know what jealousy is; and yet those who know her best, assert that she would be heart-broken if she should lose him.
