Petroleum Centre Daily Record.

Pet. Centre, Friday, March 19.

A Memphis encounter is thus described: As the two armed adversaries met, with their eyes fixed upon each other, and without a word being uttered, the Indian seized the Captain by the left shoulder, and raised his revolver to the breast of the Captain, with perfect control of himself. In return instantly clenched with his left hand the right arm of the Indian, near the shoulder, and prevented the free use of his revolver. In this close encounter, both used their weapons as best they could. The Indian discharged his revolver three times with the muzzle close at the side of the Captain, who, by crowding his arm away, prevented himself from being shot through the middle. At the same time he was sending his bullets into the Indian's breast with his right hand which was unrestrained.

"Have you the Young Man's Companion?" inquired a gentleman yesterday at one of our book stores. "Yes sir—there's one right before you," was the reply of the lady attendant upon the other side of the counter. The gentleman was a little short-sighted in a double sense, and began lumbering among the books on the counter. He didn't see either the point, the book, or the black eyes of the merry and plump lady.

Among the presents to Mrs. Scott Siddons, in Cincinnati, was a fine mocking bird, with the following lines inscribed on the cage: "In copying nature, thou art I. Art thou engaged in love? To face I yield and love the strife, For thou, like me, art true to life."

The following is taken from an advertisement of Dr. N-'s liver-enriching, silent-purifier family pills: "This pill is as mild as a pet lamb, and it don't go boiling about. It attends strictly to business, and is as certain as an alarm clock."
