Or all the silly performances adults ever engaged in, marrying "in fun" seems to ma least excusable, not because we would exclude fun from matrimony, but because something less sacred than the obligations imposed upon man and wife should be selected for "pure sport." We are thereforrather inclined to enjoy the predicament of a party of eight, all highly fastionable p.o. ple, who, for lack of something to pass the time, were "married in fun," at White Rivof Junction, Vermont, recently. After the four couples were duly pronounced man and wife, "by the laws of the State, and before these witnesses," it was discovered that the man who officiated was really a Justice of the Peace. One of the principle fools in the play, a learned professor, was to have been married in two weeks. Seven of the party involved were engaged to be married, but not to the persons they married "in fun."-The Justice who married them has been fined fifty dollars a couple for his prank -be belongs to another county, and is supposed to have been animated by petty malice-and it is gravely announced that the Legislature has been applied to to untie the terrified couples. These things do very well in a theatrical way, -in real life they are apt to make people look very ridiculous.

The Cleveland Herald says the freight business on the Lake Shore Railroad is very cure cars and power enough to transport fered. Carrie Moore rides the velocipede in Boston at Horticultural Hall, dressed thus: In a very pretty blue tonic, fitting the body closely, with a short skirt, trimmed with red cloth and gold lace, flesh-colored tights covered to the knee with loose red trunks, with broad blue stripes on the sides. On her head a jaunty little bat, matching well with the rest of her costume, with a long, waving estrich plume. And, of course, she delights with grace and agility.

Tuene is considerable of an excitement in the oil market at present. The price bas "gone up" rapidly within a day or two past in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and the foreign markets. This is good news for the producer.
