W. H. CHRISTIE, 1001 N. 12th St., Wash. D. C.

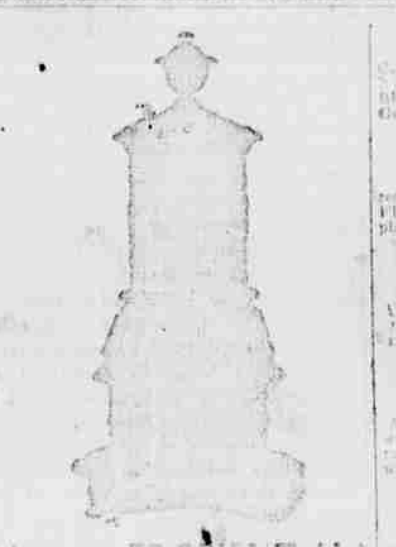

For a month or a fortnight ago, a letter of $20,000 francs was recently left to my wife and I by my friend with her daughter's extreme poverty. Unfortunately it was not a letter, but a young detective. He asked for business days to prosecute the matter. At the end of that time he had been unsuccessful, and he begged for two days more. Still he was apparently not satisfied, and he requested that the time might be extended to a month. When this period had elapsed, and he persisted in his demand, I was obliged to give him the money. It was obvious, the detective was a scoundrel, but he did not care. I was very angry, and I wrote him a reply, that I would not give him any more money. He then wrote me that I had been very kind to him, and that he would be very grateful to me. He then wrote me that he would be very grateful to me.
