C. H. Heard is out in a letter to the Record, in which he advocates the necessity of a Young Men's Christian Association at Petroleum Centre. Mr. Heard very truly says, it will require money, but not half as much as vice costs. The suggestion is a good one and ought to be carried out. The injury to young men at Petroleum Centre, or anywhere else, arises from the fact that there are too many dissipated places to entice them, and too few, or none, of that better sort, where they could spend their evenings in profitable instruction or harmless amusement.—Venango Spectator.

The Spectator takes the right view of the matter. If men, instead of preaching and writing up a place as being the worst in the country, or some at home and many abroad are apt to do about this place, would go to work and endeavor to remedy those evils by the formation of such societies as the Spectator speaks of, where young men could spend their evenings both pleasantly and profitably, much good might be done, and many of the evils which now exist would be remedied if not entirely abolished. Who will be the first to act in the matter?

The Venango Spectator spoils the story recently published in the Meadville Republican in regard to Gus Ribel presenting his counsel, A. B. Richmond, Esq., with a splendid diamond ring. The Spectator says: Ribel, was equally liberal with Capt. C. E. Taylor, of Franklin, his other counsel, to whom he gave a magnificent gold watch and chain worth as much as if not more than the ring. The story of his magnificence of the ring was by the presentation of the diamond ring, which is a very pretty one and is a pity to spoil it. Mr. Richmond, almost jumped for joy when he saw that such an amount of money was being given to him. This is the way they do in Meadville. The Court was in the point of adjourning when the case reached in, and demanded a divorce. She was just in time. The Court put down his hat; the Sheriff was in the middle of his "Heave ye!" hear ye!" and the witness came. When the Court said: "I will take a spring lamb to describe the circle of which his eye is the centre." Mrs. Ellen M. Beck no more.

A popular negro preacher in Kentucky is losing his audience from the superstition which attaches to him as an unlucky man. Once he was blown up, by the explosion of powder; again his church was by lightning during services; and a third time the floor fell on and killed him. Some things are really very strange.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF CONGRESSMEN.

THE LEADER OF THE HOUSE—GEN. BUTLER GOES ONE EYE ON SCHENCK—THE FATHER OF THE HOUSE—NEW ANECDOTE OF THE HON. JOHN MORRISSEY.

What a correspondent says of the leader in Congress:—My attention was called to a short, stout man, who resembles Gen. Grant, namely, Robert C. Schenck, the leader of the Radicals in the House. He is dressed in a suit of blue cloth. His double-breasted sack coat, buttoned up, gives him the air of a sea captain just arrived from an Indian voyage. His face is red, and his whiskers and hair are brown. His features are common and coarse, and give him the air of an angry bulldog. It is said by those that know him that the face is an index of the man. Ben Butler is rapidly riding himself of the few hairs that yet intrude on his scalp. He was dressed in black. His left eye kept on the movements of Schenck, whom he both hates and envies, and his right optic was levelled at Dawes, who is the father of the House, and who wishes to jump into old Thad Stevens's shoes, which Ben thinks are just his fit and nobody else's. Hooper, the man who looks after the banking interest, sat beside Ames, of Pacific Railroad notoriety.

Paine of Wisconsin, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, wears very long hair, is very loquacious, has an abundance of wind, and has never been known to give out. Orth of Indiana glided by with the serenity of a floating swan in the Central Park. He has made money since he has been here, and I will tell you how in my next. Brigham, whom Ben Butler called the murderer of Mrs. Surratt, was in a melancholy mood, and sat by himself. Garfield of Ohio conversed familiarly with James Brooks, Seneca, and Eldridge of Wisconsin. Sunset Cox, who made his appearance on the floor for the first time in five years, was busily paying his respects to his old friends.

Gen. Logan engaged Ben Butler and Fernando Wood in conversation, a circumstance at which Schenck became alarmed. Judge Kelly, of Pennsylvania had to hear John Covode appeal to be admitted to his seat. Gen. Morgan of Ohio looks defiantly through his spectacles at all the red hot Radicals, and turns for consolation to Dan Voorhees, who sits at the next desk to him. John Morrissey is, as usual, cool as a cucumber, and troubles himself very little about anything. He has Michael C. Kerr of Indiana near by to wink at him when his turn comes to vote.

I have an anecdote of John Morrissey, told me to-night by a Congressman who heard it from Schuyler Colfax's own lips, shortly after Mr. Morrissey made his debut in Congress. Mr. Colfax, who was then Speaker, was busily making up the Committee, and happened to be conversing with three or four members. He observed Morrissey repeatedly crossing by the door as though desirous of entering. At last, after the departure of Mr. Colfax's visitors, Morrissey stealthily crept up to the door, took a peep, saw that no one was there, and entered. Approaching Mr. Colfax, he said:

"Mr. Speaker, I have a fine box of Havana cigars I am going to send you. Will you accept them?" "Oh yes, certainly," replied Mr. Colfax. "Anything in that line is acceptable." "All right," said Morrissey. After a pause he suddenly broke out: "Mr. Speaker, I have a favor to ask. I want you to put me on a certain Committee." "Leave the cigars on one side, and tell me what one it is," replied Mr. Colfax. Morrissey made a strenuous effort, closed his fist, and, as he brought it down on the desk, said: "I want you to put me on that Committee where I will have a—little work to do." "All right," said Mr. Colfax. When the Committees were announced, the name of the Hon. John Morrissey was found brizzing up the rear of the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Comparisons are not always odious. Some times they are comforting and convincing, as in the instance of Mr. Maury, of Dabney, speaking to a resolution in the National Board of Trade. He showed that a double track road, 1,200 miles long, with trains starting every five minutes, having 3,000 trains on the track with 51,000 cars in constant motion, 365 days in the year, would have a capacity of only 15,760,000 tons each way; while the Virginia water line, with boats of 280 tons and double locks, used only 300 days in the year, would have a capacity of over 16,000,000 tons each way.

Whitworth is a desperate character, and is supposed to be the murderer.

It is stated in official circles that the Spanish gunboats will be released. Judge Pierpont has on several occasions officially called the attention of the Peruvian Minister to the importance of his producing evidence to sustain the charges upon which the gunboats were libelled, but the Minister has taken no further steps in the matter, and appears indifferent as to whether the vessels are detained or not. Judge Pierpont says he has not sufficient evidence in his possession to warrant further detention.
