THE CIPHER PUZZLE.

The authenticity of Shakespeare's autograph being vainly discussed by a large and merry party assembled round the fire-side of a cheerful country mansion, a young lady present, rejoicing in the possession of the blindest of blue eyes and the sunniest of golden hair, was heard to remark that, "if all things, she envied the possessor of such a treasure." On retiring to rest, she discovered the following for decipher on her dressing table:

You & a O
I O the;
O O no O
But O O me.
And O let my O.
Tay O be,
And give sig for sig for
I O for thee.

ANSWER.
You sign for a cipher,
I sigh for thee;
O sign for no cipher,
But O sign for me,
And O let my cipher
Tay cipher be,
And give sigh for sigh for
I sigh for thee.

A bride who had been entrapped into marrying a worthless fellow, and had been taken to his cabin, berated him for lying to her on two different occasions about his three story house. "But, you see, my dear Joe, and only one." "Well, then the two story house is one story, isn't it?" he asked. "I told you I had three, didn't I?"

A wedding of "young folks" took place in the county last week, the groom being eighty two and the bride sixty five.
