Editors, we are told, have a first-rate time 10 Texas. The ladies of a town out there bave given to the editor of the paper an embroidered shirt, which contains a spiendid history of Texas, including the war with Mexico, and the meeting of the first legislature, and also pictures of the fruits and cereass of the State all worked in red and worsted. The editor never wore a shirt in his life, and he thought it was a banner for the temperates procession which was to come off the next week. So he made a little speech of thanks, in which he said be would "fling it out forever to the breezes of heaven, that they might kies its folds, and till his hand was palsted it should never be traited in the cust-never." The fadies did not understand him, and when he spoke about its trailing they blushed and said they were very sorry they had made it too long. But a committee man took the editor saids and explained the shift to him in whisper, and the next day he appeared at his effice with that shirt mounted over his coat, and wrote four columns of explanation for his paper. The shirt is much admired by the beys of the town, for when the editor goes out to walk they follow him in regiments, studying the history of Texas and the fine arts of the back of the shirt
