The lecture last evening, at Sobel's Opera House, by Hon. Wm. Parsons, was a sucesse in every respect, and gave universal setistaction to all who heard it. The Hon. gentleman is a fluent and ready speaker, and bandles the subject in a manner that s ows him to be thoroughly conversant with the life of George Stevenson, and the inci sten's of his founding and connection with s diware Mr. Persons is an orator of no mean annity, and beld his audience etrept for nearly two bears in describing toe scenus and fueldents in the life of Stevenson, and nearly all units in pronouncing it the figest lecture of the course. The Hon, gentleman lectures at Titusville this erening, and will undoubtedly draw a crowded house, as was the case here.

The Great . Red River Raft.

Everybody has board of the great Red River Raft and that it is a vast mass of dfift-wood, completely obstructing navigation at the point where it covers the water with its countless trunks of forest trees. The river passes under this mass as if it were a bridge. In 1833, when the raft was one bundred and twenty-four miles long, the general government began the work of removing it; but after working at it for twenty-two years, abandoned the attempt as impracticable, and confined its efforts to the opening up some of the lateral channels or bayous. The most curious characteristic of this great raft, is that it moves up the river against the current, instead of down. This movement is very slow, being but a mile or two in a year. The explanation of this retrogade progression of an apparently stationary mass is simple enough. The logs, at the lower end of the raft, are continually broken away and carried off by the currents, while fresh drift-wood is brought down, and added to the upper end by freshets and floods. Thus, the raft, always failing away at one end, and growing at the other gradually moves up the river, and it is calculated that It has moved since its first forming about four hundred miles. Scientific writers have suggested the idea that tais wast mass of timber, after lying in the ld bed of the river for quite a number of ages, will become a great coal bed.
