Just below the summit of the Green mountains, three-fourths of a mile south of the Hancock turnpike, is situated a pond of water that deserves to be classed among the curiosities of Vermont. Its length is some one hundred rods, while its width is about fifty rods. It is of unknown depth, but has been sounded one hundred feet, without bottom. As far as known it is fed by only one small spring of ice cold water that would scarcely fill a half inch pipe, while its outlets is six or eight times as large. Its waters are very warm, warmer than the water of any lake or river. Trout and leaches of large size inhabit the pond in goodly numbers, the latter especially.

The newly married French Minister to China was treated to a banquet in Egypt upon one of the pyramids, with M. De Lesseps as a table companion.
