The cigar trade is now employing a vast amount of capital, and men who began small now wield millions of dollars in this business. Imported cigars are enormously expensive. This arises not only from their cost in Havana, but also from the duty, which is eighty per cent.

THIN.—Our Oil Stocking boys are indignant at the amount of impudence which the Petrolia, of Petroleum Centre continue to exhibit in endeavoring to get up another match with them. Our club is always ready to accept a challenge from any respectable and honorable club in this district of the country, and are always willing to invite any club who know how to accept, as gentlemen, the professional amenities which are usually extended to them. But they do not wish to have any dealings with a club, that will go all over the State for the purpose of gathering together a champion eleven fit to play the Red Stockings, and then endeavor to palm them off on us as the Petrolia, of Petroleum Centre, and all for the purpose of winning a few paltry dollars.—We would remind the Petrolia that the members of the Oil Stocking Club are gentlemen.—Franklin Cer. Titusville Sunday News.

Any person that read the telegram from the Oil Stocking Club to the Petrolia, published in the Record a day or two ago, can readily discover how absurd and utterly without foundation are the assertions of the above correspondent, and to what extremes this very respectable (?) club are led to relieve themselves of the odium cast upon them by their shabby treatment of the Petrolia. Query—If the Oil Stocking Base Ball Club disbanded, as their last telegram stated, what need have they of a correspondent to champion its cause, and if no longer an organization—three of its members having gone to college—why so sensitive of its reputation? Can any one answer the conundrum?

Meantime the challenge of the Petrolia to the defunct Oil Stockings remains open.

The three unfinished steamers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's Philadelphia and European line, the Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, are progressing nicely. The former will be ready for launching by the latter part of next month.

During a recent storm in a Massachusetts village hundreds of chimney swallows took refuge in a room, the window of which had been accidentally left open.

Perhaps the strangest domestic pet ever heard of was recently exhibited at a meeting of the British Association by Sir John Lubbock. It was a tame wasp, which had been in his possession for about three months. It now ate sugar from his hand, and allowed him to stroke it. The wasp had every appearance of health and happiness; and although it enjoyed an "outing" occasionally, it readily returned to its bottle, which it seemed to regard as a home.

We learn that our townsmen, Messrs. Egbert, Woods, Irwin, and Stewart of Cherry-tree, yesterday, purchased 60 acres of land in the Upper Bennehoff Run territory, located near the Hyde Farm. Terms private.

In St. Louis the other day a wild steer made a furious attack on a lady, but got his horns tangled in a great depth of panier, that protected the body from the first thrust. As the steer drew back he carried away the whole after guard of the lady's dress, which so blinded him for a moment that the lady escaped.

A New York damsel recently concocted a story about a lover who insisted upon her marrying him at the point of a pistol, and finally shot at her, inflicting only a slight wound in the arm. It was ascertained that the lover was a myth, and that she inflicted the wound herself, and told the story to create a sensation.

The Comet is passed, but worse troubles are in store for us. A celebrated Italian astronomer, who has made the sun a study, has noticed during the recent hot weather a strange phenomena in the sun that may possibly account for our discomfort here.—The sun seems to be replenishing its fuel, and the heat is consequently increasing.—The rumored cooling of the sun seems to be counteracted, and there is now danger that the earth may be depopulated on account of the excessive heat.

Stanley has sent the editor of the New York Herald, by an American ship direct from Zanzibar, a superb brown dog, which is described as "larger than a lion." The dog is a mixture of the St. Bernard and some African breed.

GOING TO THE CIRCUS.

The last circus to which I paid my fifty cents for an invitation was one of those very obese menagerie entertainments. The boys chased it into town about ten o'clock and then the chase became general. Gray-headed farmers from the interior and red-headed farmers from the exterior, women with spectacles and babies with the stomach-ache, old men trembling on the verge of matrimony, big boys bare footed and little boys bare-seated, girls with their beaux and Indians with their arrows, all joined in chasing their obese entertainment.

I went in the evening with Deacon Smith to interview the menagerie and study the mighty wonders of the Animal Kingdom.—Also to discountenance the circus and frown upon its immoralities. Some people go in the afternoon, but it shows a lack of modesty and an utter disregard of public opinion. Arriving early we went into a side show to see the great living anaconda—that terrible insect who draws its victims to its bosom and folds them in a loving embrace. There was also the little woman with the big head, and the big woman with the little head, and the showman with the bullet head. There was also the attenuated woman, so thin that you could count the eyelet holes in her corset; and a fat woman, whose fleshy carcass would have furnished meat six years for a cannibal eating saloon. There were figures in beeswax of Pocahontas assassinating a member of the Smith family, and Goliath with his jaw bone killing the wicked Philistines. As I turned to point a moral to the Deacon I found him discountenancing an immorality in the farther end of the tent.

She was a female immorality doing the "caneen" dressed in a pair of prize package earrings and a blue sash. On entering, the menagerie we found the ring filled with immoralities of all sizes on horses. These were also females. No useless clothing encumbered their fairy forms but with the freedom of an unchristianized savage they floated around faster and faster, until the whole circling mass of bare arms and ditto legs resembled a huge mass of statuary struck by lightning. This was followed by a number of bare faced performers, all of which required constant discountenancing. Last but not least came the trapeze with its flying females. They had nothing on but their modesty, and very little of that. I glanced at the Deacon but his gaze was fixed and he was discountenancing them with breathless awe. Wishing to inculcate a moral, I turned to a noble looking youth and said:

"Avoid the Circus, my little man, And shun those seductive snares," Said he: "Old boss, its a Caravan, And I'm busy watching the Bares."

After the entertainment I walked home with the good Deacon, and though while in the exercise of his duty he had been deprived of investigating the menagerie, he felt happy in the consciousness of having discountenanced and frowned upon the vicious immoralities of the Circus. Poor Deacon, he paid his money to see the caged animals, but could not turn his eyes from duty, destiny or the bare. [Recollections of Apoth. E. Cary, in Catskill Recorder.
