The Spectator has a curious article on European royalty. The total number of European sovereigns-excluding the non-hereditary Pope and the semi-Asiatic Sultan-amounted, on the 1st of January of the present year, to exactly 39. Of this number, no fewer than 30 are of direct German origin, that is born and bred in Germany, while of the remaning nine, there are four of German descent. The only five non-German sovereigns of Europe, the rulers of France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, and Sweden, are, however, more or less closely related to German families. The following extract will be read with interest at the present moment:-"The marriage of the heir apparent of Great Britain with Princess Alexandra has brought our Royal Family into some peculiar relationships, which may have the effect of adding still more confusion to the great Schleswig-Holstein puzzle. While the present King of Denmark is father to the Princess of Wales, his rival, as far as the German Duchies are con-cerned, Prince Frederick of Augustenburg, is private fortune, which he increased enormously likewise nearly connected by marriage with by investing it in commercial undertakings pa-Queen Victoria; and both on the Glucksburg | tronised by the Government. As leading partand the Augustenburg side there are a host of ner in the colonial "Maatschappy," a sort of morganatic princes and princesses which bring Dutch East India Company, he was able the relationship down to the very root of the to employ most profitably both his cash Schleswig-Holstein temple of the winds. Prince and his royal prerogative, with the net se-Frederick of Augustenburg, the pretender, sult of leaving to his heirs a private gave his hand, in 1856, to Princess Adelaide fortune of 150 millions of florins, or twelve and of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, whose mother is a half millions sterling. The successors of daughter of the late Duchess of Kent, by he King William I. continued his trading speculafirst husband, and consequently half-sister of tions, though not to the same extent, and are Queen Victoria. The house of Hohenlohe-Langenburg belongs to the 'mediatised' families of Germany, and does not stand very high, since the Hohenlohes, detesting the law of primogeniture, have split into no less than eleven different lines, all rich in greauy communication for the same of the primogeniture, have split into no less than eleven different lines, all rich in worshiped to this day more than in any other members but poor in property. Nevertheless, in becoming the rival of the new King of Denmark, the Prince of Augustenburg has the consolation that the family of the former is not in much better position. The eldest brother of King Christian, head of the house of Schleswig-Holstein-Glucksburg, is in the position of a country squire in Holstein, and scarcely any members of his family have risen above this rank. The eldest of the eight brothers and hit upon quite an original idea for making sisters, Princess Marie, aunt of our Princess of money. He set up a large Wales, married in 1837, a Colonel Lasberg, brewery and distillery, and forbade Wales, married in 1837, a Colonel Lasberg, who died in 1843; after which she united herself in second nuptials to a Count Hohenthal, a gold-stick in waiting at the Court of Dresden. The second aunt of the Prince of Wales is widow of the semi-lunatic Duke of Anhalt-Bernborg, while the the third, whose history is said to be spiced with romance, has become abbess of the monastry of Itzehoe. Dryden's

ROYALTY IN EUROPE.

"I have a sister, abbess in Terceras, Who lost her lover on her bridal day." is said to have been put, with a variation, in the mouth of King Christian, in a spiteful play performed at Copenhagen. The five brothers of the King, including the head of the families, are altogether social necessities; two being country squires, the third an officer in the Austrian service, and the fourth and fifth majors in the army of Prussia. Consequently, though the rise of the Glucksburg family has been more rapid than that of the Coburgs, it will probably be confined, at least for some time, to the sons and daughters of King Christian, the Leopold of his house. However, as it is, the achievement is already something marvelous. But a dozen years ago, an unknown member of a quite unknown family, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg has now be come a king whose voice is heard in the councils of Europe, with a daughter destined to wear the diadem of the noblest empire in the world, and last, not least, a son possessing the privilege of addressing his own father, as Monsieur mon frere. It is not often that a youngster of eighteen becomes a king before his sire, and has the pleasure of complimenting his progenitor on his accession to the throne. But for the existence of Royal Family alliances, the case might never have happened; for were not the sister a Princess of Wales, no wind could possibly have drifted the young Glucksburg mid-shipman upon the throne of the Hellenes." The writer gives the following information respecting the fortunes of the royal families of Europe: "It is scarcely necessary to say that. with the exception of one or two countries, such as Great Britain or Russia, the possession of wealth is a very important consideration in the formation of family alliances. To most constitutional rulers of the present day the possession of a private fortune has become an absolute necessity, since the official income smiling, "Iron crowns are no good now a days; none but golden crowns will do, my dear." the 'civil list' is seldom, if ever, large enough to enable them to keep their real or ideal position, besides allowing them to gratify the numerous claims of liberality and benevolence which arise unceasingly. Most princes know, too, that it is a bad policy to walk the streets with a cotton umbrella and hobnailed boots, like the late King Louis Phillippe; or to drive hard bargains in herrings and cheese after the manner of Dutch William I. A roya marriage itself is a very expensive thing, and has mostly to be provided for out of family funds, there being but one British Parhament in the world, ready and willing to treat any little bills arising out of them as extras of the civil list. The nuptials of the Prince of Wales last year, though nothing out of the way in splendor or magnificence, cost exactly £23,455 which the House of Commons granted with only one dissentient vote, but which the most loyal of continental Chambers would certainly decline to contribute as absolutely beyond their power. Moreover, the clear annual income, or salary, of half the sovereigns of Europe does not amount to £23,455, and supposing this to be the usual expenses of a royal marriage, and there being no private fortune in the background, the members of all these families would be reduced to morganatic alliances. Fortunately for royal ladies, there are a number of reigning houses in Europe possessing immense wealth and this is getting gradually distributed by a number of well-contrived family connections throughout the whole royal class. Up to the commencement of the present century, the richest sovereign family of Europe, excluding Russia, was the house of Hapsburg-Lorraine. They possessed, and still possess, enormous estates within the Austrian empire as private property, which, though mismanaged in most nstances, produce above a million sterlper annum. Vastly superior to private in every respect, is that of the reigning family of Russia. According to Baron von Haxthausen, more than a million square miles of cultivated land and forests, besides some two million square miles of uncultivated land, mountains and steppes, partly in European and partly in Asiatic Russia, belong directly to the Emperor, and are under his absodute control. The real revenue derived from these gigantic possessions is unknown; but it is generally estimated that the expenditure of the Russian Court, including the allowance paid to the numerous grand dukes and duchesses. cannot be less than about three millions sterling a year. The rate of expenditure of the imperial family may be estimated from the recorded fact that, when the late Empress Dowager, the widow of Nicholas, went to Italy, in the summer of 1860, her suite comprised above 200 persons, with an adequate number of horses and carriages, the cost of maintenance of which was calculated at the period by German newspaper correspondents at £3,000 per diem. The coronation of Alexander II. at Moscow, in September, 1856, is estimated on like authority to have cost above eight millions of roubles, or some £1,300,000. These enormous fortunes of the Imperial Family of Russia, as well as of the House of Hapsburg, are gradually getting distributed through blood al-liances. Many of the smaller German families, for example, have greatly enriched themselves by their matrimonial connection with the reigning house of Russia. Czarina Catherine II., a Princess of the House of Anhalt, made a present of most valuable domains in Southern Russia, comprising an area of about 230 square miles, to her kinsfolk at home, the income of which they enjoy to the present day. It is this lavish liberality which has not a little contributed to the eagerness with which Russian alliances are sought after in Germany, and the consequent influence they exercise.

Leaving aside the wealth of the Imperial house of Holstein-Gottorp, which can scarcely be called private property, the richest sovereign family in Europe is commonly believed to be that of Austria, and next to it the house of Nassau-Orange, ruling the Netherlands. The riches of the latter family have-been acquired almost entirely within the last few generations. When William VI. of Nassau-Orange, was called, in 1815, to the throne of the Netherlands, which he afterwards filled as still considered leading personages on the Amsterdam Exchange. It is very probable that this commercially-acquired wealth has greatly contributed to fortify the Nassauworshiped to this day more than in any other part of Europe. Many German sovereigns have traded for the last half-century in exactly he same manner as the first King of the Netherands, with results equally fortunate in comparison. Some reigning princes to this day are stock-jobbers, some cattle-dealers, some armers, and some mining adventurers. The shrewdest of them all, the late autocrat of the principality of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen. his subjects, under heavy penalties; to consume any other ale or spirits than those issued from the princely establishment. Of course, he drove a "roaring trade," notwithstanding the fact that his beer and "brannwein," were much dearer and much weise than like articles furnished by plebeian brewers and distillers to the subjects of neighboring potentates. Prince Gunther of Schwarzburgondershausen in this manner earned some 20,000,000 thalers, which he invested in the purchase of large estates in Bohemia and the Grand Duchies of Mecklenburg. But the more money he made the more greedy he got, and at last his beer and gin became so dear and so bad that his faithful subjects could not stand it any longer. Consequently on one fine morning in August, 1835, one-half of the sixty thousand inhabitants of the principality assembled in front of the Schloss of their master, and burst out shouting for ale and liberty. The poor Prince misun derstood their cries, and, feeling the remorse of actions not spirit-proof, he fled in great haste, leaving behind his deed of abdication. His tinue the brewing and distilling business, and he set up therefore, as paper-maker and wholesale dealer in chiffrons, making it penal to buy and sell rags elsewhere than at the princely factory. Many a fortune has been made in this way, in modern times in the fatherland of princes. This movement which thus changes poor sovereigns into active traders and adventurers, to convert them finally into wealthy capitalists, is not without its political importance. The great royal family of Enrope, taken as a class, might perhaps, be in danger of losing part of its prestige, at the side of a rising and all-powerful money aristocracy, were it not carried forward by the same tide of success. It is evidently a wide-spread feeling of modern royalty that in our days it will not do even for kings to be poor. A characteristic little anecdote, showing the views on this subject entertained by modern princes, is told of the present Emperor of Austria. Soon after his marriage, Francis Joseph was pressed by his consort to allow himself to be solemnly problaimed King of Lombardy, by placing the iron crown of Charlemagne on his head. Whereupon the young Kaiser replied, son and successor did not think it safe to con-
