IRON-GLADS.

Just at this time, when the sea-going qualities of iron-clads are being so extensively discussed, the cruise of the French fleet possesses more than ordinary interest. It consisted of five iron-clads, the Solferino Magenta, Couronne, Invincible, and Nor, mandie, attended by the wooden screw line-of-battle ships Tourville and Napoleon, acting in the capacity of tenders, and also intended to compare the behavior at sea of iron clads and wooden ships. The voyage was made last September in the Bay of Biscay, and afterwards extended from Cherbourg to Madeira and the Canary Islands. The distance traversed by the vessels going and coming was not less than four thousand miles. The Solferino and Magenta are similar in their armor to our iron-clad New Ironsides, only partially plated, the ends being left bare. They carry 52 breech-loading rifled 100-pounders, on two decks. The Couronne is a ship of 6,000 tons, built of iron. Her armor is constructed of iron plates, laid between and over strips of teak-wood. She carries forty guns. The Invincible and Normandie are iron-clad fore and aft, and are driven by engines of 900 horse power. Both carry the same armament, thirty-six rifled 100pounders. The general result of the cruise appears to settle the question of the practicability of iron-clad vessels at sea. They were kept under sail for four successive days, sailing and manœuvring successfully as a squadron. They made good weather in the heaviest gale, behaving in the most admirable manner, while one of the seventyfour gun wooden tenders, going through the same performance, so injured her screw as to be compelled to make a harbor. The Solferino, on a single trial, the engines giving 57 revolutions of the screw per minute, made 14 knots per hour, consuming one hundred and thirty-eight tons of coal in twenty-four hours. The Magenta made 72 knots under sail. Both she and the Solferino beat the wooden ships.

EXIT FROM PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

A recent Panama letter revives one's shuddering recollections of the calamity in one of the churches at Santiago, Chili, by which so great a number of lives were lost. The number of victims is now stated to have been two thousand five hundred. The bodies of about two thousand have been buried, and the remains of many of the rest savs:

The gentlemen of the committee are entitled disbanded. Not long after, the rebel Fitz Hugh Lee crossed our border, and with his hungry crew marched up the Camberland Valley, with this unprincipled renegade as his guide, pointing out the highways and byways, and designating the farms and residences which offered the greatest inducements for plunder. The property destroyed during the invasion; the stores and supplies, private and public, stolen during the period the enemy remained in the beautiful valley; the lives lost, the buildings destroyed, and the fright produced in the quiet town of Carlisle by that ever to be remembered midnight bombardment, were all the results of the treachery and perfidy of this degenerate son of York. The injuries, insults, and destruction of life and property were happily suspended by the arrival of a small body of Union troops, and but for this obstacle Fishel would have completed his infamy by piloting the traitors into the streets of the State Capitol.

His own dissolute habits or the health of his relatives, are not sufficient excuses for such dastardly conduct, and we cannot imagine how any lover of his country, especially the dweller in the counties which suffered from the invasion, can affix his name to such a document.

Fishel has been convicted of his crimes and sentenced to be shot, and no earthly power should interfere with the faithful consummation of the sentence.

A ROMANCE OF THE WAR.

The ablest romance yet published, having for its basis the events of the War for the Union, is "Cudjo's Cave," by Mr. J. T. Trowbridge, and we have read it with deep interest. The scene is laid mainly among the wild and rugged mountains of East Tennessee, and the characters introduced are mainly residents of that region, though the hero, Penn Hapgood, is a "Friend" from the North. There are fugitive slaves, "poor whites," aristocratic rebels and sturdy Unionists among the dramatis personæ, and their characteristics are finely limned. The author, while showing his strong Union and anti-slavery sentiments, yet sketches the actions and modes of thought of "poor whites" and rebels with absolute impartiality, and while directing his batteries of rightcous indignation against the system of slavery, can yet see how misguided men may be forced into treason from almost the very necessities of their position. The cave from which the story takes its name was inhabited by a fugitive "chattel" named Cudjo, who subsequently admitted to its recesses a superb negro named Pompey, who had also escaped from a brutal master. Some of the Unionists who figure in the story also take refuge in the cave, to avoid rebel pursuit at the beginning of the secession movement, and much of the action cannot be found. The letter referred to of the story is located there. Among the most dramatically drawn characters are those of Penn Hapgood, the "Friend," loath to fight but forced to it; the venerable clergyman Villars, whose Unionism was the same city only twenty-three days after. On the 21st of December, while services were being performed in the Church of San Isidro, only less sacred than his religion ; the prosome artificial flowers became ignited from one of the candles on the altar. Of course, when slavery Unionist Deslow ; the stout-hearted and far-sighted loyalist Stackridge; the the fire was discovered, an immediate rush for magnanimous negro Pompey; the rough the doors took place. Women, screaming and fainting, fell in every direction, the doors beleader of "poor whites" and grovelling tool coming choked, and exit was almost impossi-ble. Providentially the fire was at once exof rich ones, Silas Ropes; the reckless adventurer Lysander Sprowl and the opulent tinguished, or we should have had a repetition secessionist and scoundrel Augustus Bytheof the 8th of December. The confusion was wood. The plot in which these strongly so great that the church was at once closed and the remainder of the services dispensed with. As in the first instance, nearly all the congrecontrasted characters figure reads as if founded on fact, and we do not doubt but gation, or by far the greater part, were similar scenes have occurred in many parts of the south. The horrifying calamity in Chili should In future the events of the war, in regions be a perpetual warning to architects and all like faithful East Tennessee, will be richly others interested in large public structures worked up by Walter Scotts and Thackenot to neglect ample provision for exit in rays yet to come; but as a worthy comcase of necessity. GOV. SEYMOUR HELPING HIS "FRIENDS." The Democratic Governor of New York and quondam candidate for the next Presidency seems to have a natural affinity with rogues and criminals. Is it therefore surprising that he should so naïvely style them "my friends ?"

We learn from a New York contemporary that a notorious scoundrel named Merritt, with half a dozen aliases, was caught in New York nearly two years ago, convicted on evidence so clear that the jury scarcely left their seats, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. As this individual had a clear record of rascality from boyhood, and had swindled innumerable persons in all parts of the country, numerous charges were made against him, and the police in various parts of the country happen, if this overcrowding of places of were waiting for the expiration of his term to lay hands on him and hold him to answer.
