[Written for the Phila. Evening Bulletin.] THE UNHEEDED LOOM. BY REV. EDWARD C. JONES, A. M.

The shuttle of time is flying, He weaves with an auburn thread; But beauty and youth are vising A magical spell to shed! And so in a round of pleasure We miss the sound of the loom, Of time, we have lost the measure, In a vision of joy and bloom.

The shuttle of time is flying, He weaves with a mingled thread, With auburn the grey is vieing, Though that grey be thinly spread; Yet the trials of life have taught us Far less than we ought to know, Though wisdom has often sought us, Her scroll of fair truth to show.

The shuttle of time is flying, He weaves with a silver thread, And though for the auburn sighing. We find that the unt has fled; And at last bowed down with sorrow. We hear the sound of the loom, With, perhaps, no blessed morrow To shine on our darkened tomb. PHILADELPHIA, February, 1964.

SABBATH · READINGS. BY THE REV. EDWARD C. JONES, A. M. SAMSON'S BETRAYAL BY DELILAH. Among the ancients of the Jewish scriptures a very conspicuous place is held by Samson. His name has become the symbol of physical strength, and we never think of him without associating with his name miraculous bodily endowments. An angel announced his birth and designated his office of a Nazarite, and we are told that his early life was happy and cloudless. The child grew and the Lord blessed him, and the spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan.' This condensed statement would lead us to believe that the juvenile days of Sansom were marked by the gravity which he lost in mature years, and that even the hallowed impulse of inspiration clevated him to higher points of spiritual vision than belonged to a period so tender. We next behold him espousing a Philistine woman at Timnath, propounding his famous riddle of the honey, and devastating the territory of the heathen with fire, on account of the insult they had heaped upon him in transferring his wife to his companion. From that period the vengence of the Philistines appears to have blazed in an unremitted flame, and numerous were the plans adopted to entrap him. But in every instance we behold this Hercules of the Jewish nation frustrating the designs of his enemies by his feats of strength which best neutralized their object. He is bound with cords, but snaps them as flax before the fire. He is imprisoned within the walls of Gaza, but in the calm midnight hour he rises, in the equally calm collected ness of his superhuman might, and carries the gates of the city, posts and all, to the top of a neighboring hill. These feats of strength would appear to be fabulous to many an unthinking mind. But why may not God create physical inequalities, as he obviously does mental differences? In mind, in intellect, in force of thought, what Samsons the world has ever had: nor have the existence of such brilliantly-endowed powers excited any astonishment or incredulity! And why may not God present to man exhibitions of bodily greatness equally marked, without shocking his philosophy or his faith? We are apt to isolate Samson from mankind and regard him as unique in his powers, even when we do not deny the existence of such a veritable personage. This too is an error. There must have been a time antecedent to the era of Sansom, when a large portion of mankind were almost his compeers in strength. In Genesis we read that, prior to the deluge, there were giants in the earth, and subsequently to Samson we read of the sons of the giant at Gath, Og and Sihon, kings of the heathen, both were pre-eminent in bodily force. And the general floating legends of the world at large, as they are embodied in the classical lore of Greece and Rome, seem to testify that it was the conviction of our race that the existence of a Hercules was as possible, nay as certain, as the existence of a God. Samson then was a representative man. He stood forth among his people as the exponent of a vigor which once had been generally granted to his race, and he must have shamed the punier race of degenerate humanity, among whom his lot was east, by the contrast thus exhibited. How lamentable the fact that such a man, the judge of his people for twenty years, should at last fall a prey to the machinations of an evil woman. Among his numerous attachments, his fondness of Delilah seems to have been supreme, and so thoroughly did she rule this man of iron by the rosy wand of female fascination. a wand which ever has, and ever will subiect us to its autocratic sway, so completely had he yielded himself to the spell which bound him, that the lords of the Philistines, who for years had been thirsting for his blood, conceived that the favorable opportunity for effecting his capture had at last arrived, and set themselves to mature a scheme which would yield into their hands, in the impotence of childhood, him, who so long had been their scourge and curse. Let us not marvel if the witchery of money was laid under requisition in this design. In effecting evil purposes when has not gold played the choiest What a tranquilizer of the nerves, what a sedative to the conscience, is coin. How it modifies the judgment and annihilates the affections of the heart. How it warps and transforms and remodels the purposes and opinions till the doctrine of transmigration of souls would appear to be realized by the spirit losing its identity and exhibiting traits it never knew before. "We will give the gold," is the open sesame, the Aladin's lamp, to throw a fairy light on blood and woe and crime. No wonder, then, that the woman Delilah felt the spell. Already lost to decorum, it required no particular persuasion to secure her aid in the subjugation of the hated Samson. Manifesting an unusual degree of love for him, she artfully solicits his solution of that perplexing problem, which had many years foiled the ingenuity of his foes, viz: where lay his remarkable strength. Seemingly awake to her purpose, he artfully evades the point, or puts her upon some ex-periments which but serve to awaken a double eagerness on her part to consummate

the work of the traitoress. She binds him with green withs and with new ropes, and then in desperation weaves the locks of his emighty hair, but all the efforts are abortive.

and she surrenders herself, with genuine postulation and grief. Day after day she plied him with inquiries. Day after day she reproached him with want of love to her: and thus besieged and importuned, he lav down, a subjugated man, at the feet of a heartless syren, and relinguished life and hope and honor to her hands of blood. The seven locks of hair which beautified and distinguished him, the crowning grace of the Nazarite, his ornament from early life. and the pledge of God's favor and protection were all clipped and shorn. The strength of the Nazarite was his no more. The ancient shield of Heaven he had vilely cast away for the insidious smile of one who had never loved him. To an enemy, to a bitter enemy had he yielded the citadel of which he had long been the heaven-appointed keeper and custodian, and from a giant was changed into a helpless, humbled, despairing man, and when with shorn locks and sightless eyes and coarse prison garb, he groaned in the place of his enthralment -when, to the ills of poverty and grief, were annexed the ignominy of his position; when the blended voices of scorn and madness came pouring into his cheerless dungeon from those who cursed the God of Israel, and who despised his ordinances and his laws-must he not, in the measureless agony of a bereaved soul, have wailed the sinful attachments he had formed-must he not have repented bitterly of his defection from goodness and honor-must he not have gone back in bitter thought to the halcyon nours of childhood, when in the camp of Dan, he felt the inward -stirrings of the spirit, and knew himself to be, by every premenitary intimation, a chosen child of

SPECIAL NOTICES. TO THE CIFIZENS OF THE EIGHTH WARD.—On the 10th of Blarch next a Drait has been ordered by the Government. By that time the Amendment of the Conscription Act will have placed vil able-bedted men, married as well as single, under torty five years of age, in he same class. Not less than five hundred of uch men will be required from the Eighth Ward, such men will be required from the Eighth Ward. All can see the importance of preventing this, and all the impossibility of doing it without your vigorous co-operation.

It can easily be accomplished. Voluntiers are abundant, but to pay the promised bountier, money is required. About $15,600 have been collected—at least as large a sum is yet to be raised. The contributions have been comparatively tew, and principally by those (including a number of ladies) not themselves liable to draft.

Our Ward reaches from Seventh street to the Schuylkirl River, and from Spruce to Chestant, and contains about twenty thousand inhabitants. These twenty thousand are alike interested, poor here twenty thousand are alike interested, poor

There twenty thousand are alike interested, poor and rich, married and single, mian and woman. Mere boasts of loya'ty, or decunctations of those opposing the Government, will not avail. Self-interest, if not patriotism, requires immediate action. In so shoot a time as yet remains, it will be impossible for the Committee to visit all. Do not, therefore, wait to be called upon. Send or bring your subscriptions, large or small, without a moment's delay, to either of the Committee. Small contributions, if numerous, will help make up the amount.
