A SLIDING SCALE OF DEMOCRACY. GROVER & BAKER'S | 1864. Modern Democracy has an extraordinary facility in adapting itself to circumstances. It makes mistakes, and very serious ones, too; but it generally manages to correct the blunder, or at all events to slip out of its consequences. The party did a pretty keen thing in 1844, when it put Mr. Polk on a Free Trade platform in the South, and proclaimed him to be "a better tariff man than Henry Clay" in the manufacturing States, and the revenue bill of 1846 was the result of the little trick. Modern Democracy has lately found out that Slavery is in a bad way, that it is bad stock to speculate upon, and the leading Copperhead newspaper oracles of New York are out against the "peculiar institution." They hold that the Democratic party was never the advocate of, or the apologist for slavery; that it always understood and appreciated its great evils; but that the said Democracy went upon the principle of minding its own business and of not meddling with the affairs of States in which it had no concern. This may be true of New York Democracy (although we doubt it); but what a position it places Pennsylvania Democracy in. It must be borne in mind that the party in this State selected for its banner bearer a man who had publicly declared that "Slavery was an incalculable blessing," and by way of special endorsement of this sentiment, the speech containing it, was published by the party as an electioneering document. Has Democracy ceased to be the catholic principle it used to be ? and has has it one set of views for Pennsylvania and another for New York?

ZERO-ALMOST.

A gentleman has just arrived in New York city with fourteen thousand dollars of Southern money, in bills of five dollars to one hundred dollars, issued by the "Mississippi and Alabama Railroad Company," and other corporations. All this money, which formed a package two inches thick, tied together with a "shoe thread," was exchanged a short time since, by a reformed rebel, for a five dollar greenback, and the "reb.," who was inside our lines, thought he was a lucky man to obtain so much.

It will not be long before every Confederate bond and note will come to this complexion, not only in the North, but even at Richmond and Montgomery. There is, however, one consolation in store for the "powers" that issued them, and that is that one hundred years hence their value as relics will double or treble, and future antiquarians will gloat over them in the way that the present unfortunate holders do not feast their eyes upon them.

OUR CONGRESSMEN AND LEAGUE ISLAND. Some very unjust allegations have been made concerning the course of the Philadelphia delegation in Congress in reference to the League Island Navy Yard project. We have had repeated proof that they have labored with zeal and ability for the interests of Philadelphia, and we believe that their labors will be successful. In the meantime, we call attention to the report of the debate on Thursday in reference to the appropriation for the purchase of an addition to the present Navy Yard, recommended by the Naval Committee. The appropriation was carried; but Mr. O'Neill,

EVENING BULLETIN SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1864.

THE NEW CAMPAIGN.

The sad news of a repulse of our troops in Florida can scarcely surprise those who have coolly calculated the chances of General Sevmour's success. A force of a few thousand men was sent into the interior of the State, and when sixty miles from its base at Jacksonville, was met by a superior force of the enemy and driven back, with lieavy loss, to Jacksonville. The rebels had long notice of the approach of our troops, and abundant means of conveying an army by railroad to meet them, of which, of course, they availed themselves. Thus, we fear, an enterprise, undertaken unwisely and with inadequate means, has been brought to a mortifying termination. Who is responsible for this disaster? Was it ordered by General Gillmore on his own responsibility? Or was it part of a general plan of campaign arranged by General Halleck? Whoever authorized it, it has proved to be a lamentable. blunder, and it should be fixed upon the right man.

This first failure in our spring campaign leads us to fear that it may all be badly planned. In North Carolina, where our forces are scattered, some of them holding useless positions, and others engaged in making raids which only irritate non-combatants, and destroy Union feeling while destroying private property, the enemy has collected a large force, partly composed of veterans of the Army of Virginia. We are again threatened with disasters there; for General Butler has not troops enough in his department to meet the enemy in the field, and there are several of our garrisoned posts exposed to siege or assault by the greatly superior forces of the rebels. Again let us ask who is answerable for the state of affairs in North Carolina.

Viewing the circumstances in the Eastern states of the South, one cannot help feeling uneasiness concerning our movements in Georgia and Alabama. Sherman has made a splendid and, thus far, successful advance. Thomas, too, has begun a movement from Chattanooga. But who knows whether Hardee, who has just defeated Seymour, may not be able to make a rapid junction by railroad with Johnston, and defeat Grant, or with Polk in Alabama and defeat Sherman? We have all confidence in our commanders in the field and in their troops. But we confess e misgivings as to the general plan, and to great fears lest our divided forces may be delested in detail, the enemy's short lines of communication and railroad facilities giving him advantages greater than those we may possess in numbers.

with much ability, maintained that it was not to interfere with the League Island project, and Messrs. Kelley and Randall sustained him, as did several members from other States.
