THE GIRLS' HIGH SCHOOL AND THE EX-AMINATIONS.

To the Editors of the Evening Bulletin: 1 have just finished reading the memorial of the Principals of the Girls' Grammar Schools in reference to the late examination for candidates. Being a pals of the Giris to the late examination for candidates. Being a recent graduate, I am prepared to say, after a close intercourse of three years with the teachers of the 'High School,' that they are impurtial in conduct—just in their teachings. The Graduate Class entertain for them the highest respect, and shall always remember them with feelings of tender regard. The candidates, it is true, have been put to a severe test; but in this life no great end is attained without personal sacridee, and although the young ladies have labored, our teachers have labored with them. With the candidate the examination is the work of one time, with the examiners it is a monotonous repetition; yet patience forms one of the leading features in their demeanor toward the pupils. The teachers have much to contend with in these examinations, yet no nurmur of complaint is heard from them, for faithfulness in the discharge of duty is the characteristic that distinguishes them, as impartial investigation will show.

Thas been said that the teachers of the settlich guishes them, as impartial investigation will show.

It has been said that the teachers of the "High It has been said that the teachers of the "High School" have a motive in rendering these examinations difficult. It is true, they have a motive—a high one: it is the bringing of their school to that high standard which but few schools attain. This is the object to which they devote time and attention, yet their efforts, instead of being appreciated and encouraged, are misunderstood and maligned.

An unbiased decision must result in pronouncing An unbiased decision must result in pronouncing the Principal of the 'High School' a gentleman, whose character is only equaled by his mental abilities. Both he and the ladies associated with him grace the position they occupy, and add new lustre to the profession they have chosen.
