THE GHEAT FIRE AT SEDALIA. MO. [COrrespondence of the Missouri Democrat.] SEDALIA, Mo., March 2.—At two o'clock this morning the patrol guard gave the alarm, when fire burst out from the main entrance and stairs of the Missouri Hotel. There were no means of escape for the occupants in the second story, except for those who were awake to leap at once from the windows into the street. The proprietor, Captain James M. Mills, barely escaped with his life, rescuing his little child from the flames, but so severely burnt its life is deepaired of, while the charred remains of his wife and youngest child have just been taken from the ruins. just been taken from the ruins.

Lieutenant Argo, Assistant Provest Marshal for this district, being one of the lodgers at this house, with characteristic coolness threw his bedding from the window, caused his little child and wife to leap safely down, threw out his trunks and clothing and escaped himself just as the flames burst into the room. Then calling to his assistance every willing hand, prominent among whom were his colored recruits, who worked like lions—he took measures to check the progress of the flames, now spreading along the south side of Main street, and threatening the entire town.

VETERINARY COLLEGE.—The commencement of the Veterinary College will take place to-to-morrow evening at Diligent Hall. The list of graduates was published in the BULLETIN 1981 [For the Philadelphia Evening Buh 'etin.] MAJOR HENRY C. WHELAN.

time when sorrows and affliction abread in the land, and every household is mourning for its special privation, it is scarcely be supposed that individual loss will arrest public notice, unless, seyond the sympathy which the mo ner has with kindred grief, the lamented one has claims of a high character upon public regard. But, multiplied as are the deaths which make mourners of almost every family in our land, each particular death brings home a sorrow that is to be respected by all and shared by many. When he that is gone has, by a faithful discharge of public duties, acquired a right to public consideration, and by the fulfilment of all the requirements of social life, multiplied friends and augmented in terests in his behalf, a neglect of the providence which permits the seeming evil of his death, seem to be injustice to the virtue that has been exercised: and others, who would profit by a beautiful exam ple, lose courage when they see that devotion to country and an exhibition of manly virtue in the cause of patriotism fail to secure that recognition which is one of the high incitements to sacrifice in the country's behalf.

With this view, it has been regarded as a public duty, as well as an act of sincere respect to the services and memory of a true-hearted man and a most valuable officer, to make special notice of th death of Major HENRY C. WHELAN, which oc curred in this city on Wednesday last, after a painful suffering from disease contracted in the discharge of duties in the Army of the Potomac. Major H. C. Whelan was the only son of the late William E. Whelan, a merchant on Market street. He was well educated at the University in this city, and was accomplished in the manners of refined social life, and seemed to have before him a career that was to be one of high enjoyment, founded on his own deservings of general respect. Mr. Whelan was one of the earliest of those who in April, 1861, responded to the call of the President of the United States for three months' volunteers, and he went into the field as an officer of the Washington Greys of this city. At the expiration of the time of service, Mr. Whelan accepted a Capaincy in the 6th Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, and continued to share and assist and direct he fortunes of the regiment till his death, holding then the commission of Lieutenant-Colonel, to become effective only when he and others should have filled up the ranks, thinned out by the fire of the enemy and the wasting fatigues and exposures of military duties incident to that arm of the public service. In most of the engagements in which his regiment was employed, Major Whelan fully participated, and he was of the number of those who ndured the most of the exposure. He knew how to do and endure, whatever might be the dangeror the suffering, for he had counted the cost of the sacrifice which he was making, and knew what duties his position devolved upon him. He had the manly pride as well as the chivalrous daring of a soldier, and felt how important to those under him must be the exhibition of zeal, vigilance, prudence and devotion; and thus feeling, all recognized the good influence of his admirable example.

Exhausted by most severe service, and prostrate with a disease (the pleurisy) which exposure had brought on, Major Whelan accepted a short 'leave of absence,' hoping, by the comforts of home and the assiduities of the loving ones around him, to gather health and recover strength for the coming struggle. And for a short time the recuperative powers of youth seemed, with good medical advice, to promise a fulfilment of the highest wishes of his friends. But the hopes thus cherished were doomed to early disappointment; and, on the second day of the present month, the sufferer peacefully resigned his spirit "to God who gave it." Major Whelan was a man of strong discrimina. ting powers. He knew the duty and the advanvantage of general courtesy and the benefit of enarged social intercourse; but he delighted in the limited circle of chosen friends, to whom he was attached by bonds that only death could sunder. Even then death only sanctified the recollection of their worth. It is not without deep emotion that the writer hereof refers to the beautiful characteristic of Major Whelan's friendship, which manifested itself during the last months of his existence, in expressions and other evidences of esteem for the memory of the chosen friend and almost inseparable companion of his youth and manhood who shared with him, also, the first essay of military life; who rose as he rose in military rank in another arm of the service, but who fell in the terrible carnage of Chancellorsville. May their kindred spirits be re-united in undying communion above. Few men have entered on life with higher personal claims to regard than Major Whelan. A manly, graceful form, easy manners and the continued evidence of correct intentions-these distinguished him in his social and his military rela tions, and augmented the interest which his course and his fate would excite. And these, with his professional excellence, will be the theme of constant laudatory remarks by those who knew him in the world. But there was another feature developed in his character by the discharge of high responsibilities and the endurance of se vere physical affliction. Major Whelan had been reared in the belief and general practice of religion; that principle, without being salient, had modified his manners, and purified his morals; and, when he was called to the responsibilities of command, and had in hours of lenely watchfulness, opportunities to meditate, he comprehended the duties which his education presented and which his situation then enforced. And when he retreated to the chamber of sickness and finally to the bed of death; he was made ready by the influence of that faith (which he had only neglected, not derided) to meet in quiet repose and holy confidence "the king of terrors," whose terrible dealings he had witnessed in so many stricken fields. It was, perhaps, a part of the reward of the exercise of a strong domestic affection, that he was allowed by a kind Providence to pass from life, in these arms that had sustained his failing body, and to console the survivor for her terrible loss by the expression of an humble, sanctified confidence in the happiness upon which he was about to enter-This was the last contest; it was full and beautifully triumphant—a victory which has an eternal

We mourn the death of one so young, so full of promise to the country, so suited to minister to social and domestic happiness, so able to illustrate by his character and new experience the beauties of a Christian life. When such an officer dies the country loses; when such a friend departs it is the social circle that weeps; when such a brother is called away

"Tis the survivor dies." J. R. C.

JAMES E. MURDOCH AT THE ACADEMY OF

MUSIC TO-NIGHT. Mr. De Haas Janvier's poem entitled "Gettysburg," we understand, has been placed in the hands of James E. Murdoch, Esq., exclusively for the benefit of the Soldiers' Aid Fairs, &c., to which Mr. M. is at present giving almost his entire time. He will read it to-night in his programme. A gentleman of this city, present in the Senate Chamber, at Washington, when it was read for the benefit of the Christian Commission, says of it: The combined solemnity of the sepulchred heroes of the Nation reposing on the hillside of Gettysburg, the noble sympathies of a people for the fallen brave, the ruth and fury, the glory and the slaughter of that flery and ensanguined battle-field, are all powerfully and artistically blended in the force and harmony of an al most faultless versification by a poet, blending in an extraordinary degree, the fervent devotion of a Christian spirit, the ardent glow of nature, art, glory and a firm and unswerving antagonism to the spirit and acts of rebellion's instigators, champions and sympathisers. "Gettysburg" is indeed a beautiful and touching tribute to the memo r) of the brave men who fell on that ever memora. hia field.

National poem, as only he can read it, and which will be read in connection with other patriotic verses by equally patriotic poets, viz: Boker, Read, Taylor and others; the whole being for the benefit of the Women's Branch of the Sanitary Commission, who furnish work, paying liberally for the same to the families of our brave soldiers now fighting the cause of our country.

GENERAL MEADE AND THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

PHILADELPHIA, Marca 7, 164.—To the Editor of the Evening Bulletin:—There is no truth in the statement recently published in the New York Tribue, that one of the corps commanders at the battle of Gettysburg had in his pocket on the 2d of July, an order from Gen. Meade directing the army to retreat. I am, Sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, JOHN GIBBON, Brig.-Gen. Vois.

In addition to the above note from General Gibbon, we append the following from a Washington

bon, we append the following from a Washington letter in the World:

"General Meade appeared before the Committee on the Conduct of the War yesterday, to answer to the charges preferred against him by Generals Sickles and Doubleday, respecting the order which they allege he issued for the retreat of the army from Gettysburg. He denied emphatically that any such order bearing the construction put upon it by these officers had ever been issued. The order which he issued, but which was not carried out, related altogether to another subject, and which he fully explained to the committee. It is understood that his explanations were not satisfactory, and that the committee intend to pursue the investigation. General Butterfield, who wrote the order, has been sent for."

from New Orleans to the 27th ult. The Times of the 26th has the following:

Mr. Mygatt, a thoroughly trustworthy citizen of Vicksburg, arrived in this city yesterday with the information that the army of Gen. Sherman has arrived at Selma, Ala, sixty-five miles from Mobile, and that the speedy capture of the latter city is a foregone conclusion. Selma being regarded as the key to that point. Mr. Mygattreceived his information from a bearer of despatches sent by Gen. Sherman to Vicksburg.

The naval attack on Mobile turns out to have been a mere "demenstration" against Fort Gaines, intended to keep Marry from going out to help Polk; a precaution which I presume was entirely unnecessary. The United States ship Nightingale was at the ume lying nearly opposite the town, the bark Arthur was stationed off the mouth of Little Bayou, and the steamers Admiral, De Soto and Sebago were at anchor about seven miles further down, near the Navy Yard. In answer to the signals from the grand ship Arthur, the three steamers immediately ran up the harbor until they came to a point opposite the burning place.

It was afterwards reported that some of the rebels in the vicinity had been sent in with orders to burn Pensacols, under the apprehension that our forces designed to occupy the place soon. Aerival of Another Veteran Regiment. GOTTSCHALK'S CONCERT THIS EVENING.—The

ARRIVAL OF ANOTHER VETERAN REGIMENT.

The 69th Regiment P. V., formerly commanded by Col. Joshua T. Owen, reached the city about ten o'clock this morning, on a furlough, having re-enlisted for the war. They were met at the Baltimore depot by the Committee of Councils, and the Henry Guards, Captain John Spear, accompanied by the Liberty Cornet Band, and were escorted to the Volunteer Refreshment Saloons. After partaking of refreshments, a short rcute was passed over, and the regiment was dismissed in Independence Square. The veterans were frequently cheered as they passed along the streets. This regiment has been in numerous hard-fought battles, and their flags bear the marks of many bullets. There were between one hundred and two hundred men belonging to the regiment in the line this morning. ABRIVAL OF ANOTHER VETERAN REGIMENT.

Independence Square. The veterans were fractured in the formation from a bearer of despatches sent by Gen. Sherman to Vicksburg.

The fighting was confined to skirmishing, but there is a doubtful rumor from another source that Gen. McPherson was mortally wounded.

We also have intelligence through a naval officer who arrived yesterday from the fleet off Mobile, that Farragut commenced his attack on the forts at the mouth of the Bay on Monday, and was still at the work on the succeeding afternoon. The whole mortar fleet off Mobile opened fire upon Fort Powell on the morning of the 32d, and kept it up increasantly during the day. This fort commands Grant's Pass.

Deserters who escaped to the blockading fleet report that the rebel guilboats are compelled to keep close to the fort for the purpose of preventing the soldiers from deserting, the fire from the mortar-boats being so effective that it would certainly be at once evacuated by the soldiers, were it not for the number itse more more evacuated by the soldiers, were it not for the number itse more powerful iron-clau than the Meringan, and now lies under the protection of its guns. The Tennessee chas arrived off Fort Morgan, and now lies under the protection of its guns. The Tennessee crossed Dog River Bar by means of lighters. An attack on the blockading fleet by this ram is expected every day. She is said to be a more powerful iron-clau than the Meringan, and their flags bear the marks of many but the first ward off for the under the fort of which only four were reported.
