It said the existence, as well as the liberty of the nation, now depended upon the contest, at the Fenian Brotherhood were resolved in the land of their fathers. He claimed the right hold his opinion, and he would say that those wn oppose them in the great work before them were not worthy the contidence of the Irish nepple. The Fenian Brotherhood had a holy mission—the cause of Irish freedom and the rest ration of Iranationality—nothing more and nothing less; and he fervently believed that the identical flag which he now had the honor to present would yet flow on Irish soil, and that it would be to Ireland what the Stars and Stripes are to glorious America.

The banner was received by Mr. James Gibbons on behalf of the brotherhood, who said the flag was 'always green because always better fully,' and pledged the Fenians to carry it to the scattered remnants of the Irish race. It was allonger a struggle for liberty, but for national limited astruction of national liberty. There was no hop of accomplishing that without organization, and the Fenians have resolved that 'reland shall a longer be the Lazarus of nations, and that if, as anation, she shall perish, that shall perish als under the folds of her green banner.

A beautiful incident of the occasion was the appearance, on the stage, of thirty-two little girldressed in white, with green sashes around them and each bearing in their hands a flag with the name of one of the counties of Ireland painted upon it.
