CAMP 79TH REGIMENT ONIO VOLUNTEERS LOOKOUT VALLEY, Tenn., March 23, 1864.

Let people talk of the "Sunny South," but let them be here to-day and all their ideas of the mild climate that exists here will be dissipated, and
climate that exists here will be dissipated, and they will realize that the Lee King of the North visits even this part of the world. Just think, snow fifteen inches deep, and that in March!
It began snowing last night, and has been falling ever since. The other day, in company with sevever since. The other day, in company with several officers of the regiment, I made a visit to the top of Lockout Mountait.

On top of the mountain is a small village named Summertown, which was once a watering place. and a resort for the chivalry of the South. It is one of the nicest little places I have seen, and there is an air of neatness, not often met in this forsaken country, about it. As you look toward the south, Chattanooga lies at the foot of the mountain, and from the foot a line of rebel earth works stretches across the valley to Mission Ridge at Rossvit e. some five or six miles. When the rebels were in possession of Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, and these earth works, Chattanooga was completely surrounded, the river being on one side. It doesem truly astonishing that we ever succeeded in taking these important positions with so small an effort and loss of life.

The scenery about Lookout is sublime, and all attempts at its description would tail to convey an adequate idea of the splendor there unfolded. The mind seems too small to take in the picture spread out before you, and you turn from it feeling your own insignificance and the greatness of the Creator. Lookout Valley extends from Trenton, Ga., to the Tennessee River, a distance of about twelve miles, and is noted for being one of the most fertile regions in the State, producing large quantities of wheat and corn. The people are more intelligent than most of those met with in this country, and ssa general thing, they are in the employ of the Government, furnishing wood for the railroad, or keeping the road in repair. The inhabitants belong to that milk-and-water class, who make good rebels or Union men, as circumstances require, but as a general thing they make better rebels than anything else.
