EVENING BULLETIN

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13, 1864.

THE BREMY IN THE REAR. The citizens of the loyal States are most emphatically a patient people, and the Government, which is their political exponent and representative, is most emphatically mild and forbearing. Open and avowed was not only tolerated, but and excused, until it grew bold by indulgence and committed the overt act at Charleston. Even then so mild was the treatment of treacherous scoundrels who richly deserved the gallows, that the English Punch sneered at our "very civil war." But Northern treason did not dare to show its head until the first flush of patriotic indignation which followed the fall of Sumter had faded away, and then the old game of taunting and bullying was recommenced and the enemies of the country did not fail to apply their old pet derisive names of "Abolitionist" and "Black Republican" to all who were loyal to the government, and who did not sympathise with Southern traitors.

There can be no reasonable pretence made that there is any considerable party in the North and West that is unfriendly to the Union, and in sympathy with treason; yet the Southern leaders understand so well the trick of manufacturin an apparent public opinion, that the world abroad is deluded into the belief that the North is seriously divided in opinion upon the great questions of the day. We could name several newspapers in the Northern, Western and Middle States, which daily and weekly pour forth torrents of abuse of the Federal Administration, and boldly take ground in respect to the war. which would be entirely consistent in a Richmond or a Charleston journal. We have read articles in some of these papers with amazement, as well as indignation, and notwithstanding our abundant observation of the lenity of the government and the forbearance of the people, we have wondered that such organs of treason should be suffered to continue to exist.

We have under our eye an article which appeared in a New York newspaper within a few days. We copy from it the following extract as a specimen of the whole:

"As to the freedom and independence of the South, we have no apprehensions. Her people can never be conquered, and, if that was possible, Abraham Lincoln is not the man to accomplish that subjugation. The address of the Virginia Assembly is a proof that the resolution which animated Virginia all through this war is as unbroken as ever; and there is no faltering, no wavering. In the eloquent words of this great document, Virginia takes no step backward. Grand old State, may we never see the day when you shall have to bow beneath the yoke of the oppresser. If that day should ever come, then will the friends of freedom, the lovers of true heroism and manhood, mourn over the sad fate of a great people, who fell while fighting for liberty and independence, fell on the same soil that gave birth to Washington, to one whose name should have been sufficient to save the great Commonwealth from the tread of the heartless

We hold that there is no considerable party in the North to which such sentiments as the above are acceptable. A newspaper uttering them cannot have any legitimate support; for its principles, or rather its want of principles, must make it abhorrent to every man who come through some channel, either legitimate or illegitimate. The conclusion then is irresistible that these treason-mongers derive their support directly from the managers of the rebellion, and it is part of the grand scheme of throwing the loyal States into a condition of anarchy and confusion, and of inducing the world to believe there is a party for treason in the North. The managers of this business make a great clamor for the freedom of the press, and they abuse the license allowed them just as the freedom of action is abused by the rebel emissaries in the North, who burn steamboats and manufactories of the munitions of war, and smuggle through the lines supplies for rebel use. These Northern advoeates of treason claim a license for the press that would not be tolerated for an instant by their Southern employers, and we can imagine the Mephistophelean glee with which Jefferson Davis sees the work his agents are performing and witnesses the forbearance of the insulted and derided Government. The calm confidence in the scrength of the Government and in the justice of its cause, displayed by the authorities in letting these quasi traitors alone most severely, is a very grand spectacle; but it may be questioned whether this thing is not going so far as to tend to the accomplishment of the demoralizing and destructive objects which the traitors at Richmond have in view. Had the administration of Franklin Pierce been less feeble, the rebellion would not have been fostered during the four years term of the small New Hampshire statesman; and had James Buchanan possessed a particle of patriotism or a trace of the old Jackson nerve and vigor, it would not have broken out in 1860; while there are not a few who believe that a more decided course with the enemy in the rear and less tenderness towards domestic aiders and abettors of the rebel leaders, would tend to the more speedy crushing out of the re-

SOUTHERN REFUGEES.

Not a day passes without the arrival in Philadelphia of a number of refugees from the rebel States. Some of them at once take care of themselves and procure work of some kind by which to make a living. Others are provided for by friends. Others, again, who are destitute and friendless, are picked up by the provost guard, and are sent to the Volunteer Refreshment Saloons, the managers of which feed them and put them in the way of getting

At Harrisburg, at Wheeling, at Cairo, at St. Louis and at many other places, Southern refugees are arriving in large numbers. No estimate can be formed of the number of Southern men, women and children who have migrated to the free States since the rebellion began, but it must be several hundred thousand. This is so much contributed to the population and power of the loyal States, and so much deducted from those of the rebellious States. The men who have cuterprise and cleverness enough to escape from the conscription of the Davis despotism must be vigorous and intelligent, and where their sincerity is assured, they are deserving of a generous welcome among our people. Fortunately for them, there is such a demand for labor of all kinds, that we can afford to welcome them, as well as the thousands of immigrants that are coming from Europe. But there are many women and children, and some feeble men, who have suffered and lost everything at the South, who need something more than a welcome. At the West associations have been formed to take care of the destitute refugees, and at the St. Louis Sanitary Fair there is to be a department especially in aid of the Union refugees and freedmen. Would it not be well to have something of the kind in the Great Central Fair in this city? The refugees that have come among us are henceforth to be our fellow-citizens, and those of them who have suffered in the Union cause and who are unable to get fairly started in business in their new home are entitled to substantial assistance from the old residents.

THE SLATE-ROOF HOUSE.

The Slate-Roof House (a misnomer by the way, for it has had a wooden covering upon it for a period whereof the memory of middle-aged man runneth not to the contrary), is now one of the principal local objects of conversation. The old mansion, which was a very stylish affair, in fact the most stylish in town, when it was built for Samuel Carpenter, the wealthiest resident of the province, has lagged greatly behind the age, and while very curious, it is scarcely useful, and not at all ornamental. It is in the way of much needed improvements, and while it is greatly to be desired that it should be restored to its original condition and preserved as a curious relic of the infant days of the city, the strong probabilities are that it will have to make way for the progress of the times.

The late Mr. Elliot Cresson left ten thousand dollars, by will, for the purchase, restoration and preservation of the ancient structure; but the price was either insufficient, or the then owner was unwilling to sell, or bo h, and so that proposition ended. The Historical Society have properly taken the matter in hand, now that the destruction of the building is imminent, and a committee of active gentlemen and zealous antiquarians has been formed for the purpose of endeavoring to preserve the building in some form. The value of the ground upon which it stands will probably preclude the possibility of its purchase. Its bodily removal to some distant point is an impossibility, and the most feasible plan suggested thus far is to have it taken carefully to pieces, the various parts marked and numbered, and the whole removed to Fairmount Park, where it can be reconstructed in its original form. Old-fashioned brick and mortar are very tenacious of each other's company, and wrought nails stick tightly in ancient timbers. These would be the principal objects to be overcome, and there would necessarily be some breakage; but a sufficient portion of the materials to make the structure substantially the same could doubtless be secured, and it would form a quaint and appropriate monument to the founder of the State. With the old house rebuilt and is not a traitor at heart. Publishing a other memorials of the times of Wm. Penn newspaper is an expensive business now-a- as could be procured, it would form one of the says, and the means of supporting it must principal attractions of Fairmount Park, and while a monument of the past, the two localities it will have occupied would show to future generations how far Philadelphia grew between 1665 and 1864. We Americans, in our rapid progress, and in the whirl and excitement of the present, have too little veneration for the past, and we scarcely think of the preservation of an interesting relic until it is too late. The old mansion referred to is one of the most interesting in the city, both in respect to its architecture and for its historical associations. While we would not urge that the Past should be allowed to stand in the way of the Present, we would like to see the worthy memorials of the far distant past preserved. We trust that the Old Slate Roof house may be spared, and that it will occupy a place where it will not only not be in the way, but where it will be an improvement and form a fresh attraction to the

THE PHILADELPHIA YACHT CLUB .- We earn that the Yacht Club of this city will take possession of the new Club house in Camden in the course of next week. The Club house has been handsomely fitted up, under the direction of Mr. John Hutchinson, at a cost of about $1,000. The Club new numbers over one hundred and forty members, who take a deep interest in the delightful recreation of yachting. The first grand regatta of the season will take place on the second Tuesday of June, and great preparations are making for the event. We wish the Club every success, and hope that its numbers will be largely increased from among the lovers of squatic sports.

GERMAN OPERA .- On Monday evening next a brief season of German Opera will begin at the new Chestnut Street Theatre. The company has met with such success in Washington that they prolong their stay there instead of appearing here on Friday next as first advertised. Mr. A. Birgfeld is the business manager, and the public will be sure that his department will be faithfully attended to. The opening opera will be Martha. The price of tickets to the dress circle and parquet will be only fifty cents, with twenty-five cents extra for reserved seats.
