The French government having only imperfect information as to the destination of the ships, and the use to be made of the arms ordered, had furmished to M. Yoruz every facility desirable to enable him to fulfil his contract.

On the 8th of October Mr. Dayton presented to M. Drouyn de Lhuys new proofs, and among others the copy of a contract, signed July 16th, 1862, by which M. Arman engaged with Mr. Bullock to build two iron, clad vessels, and the copy of an agreement, dated September 17th, by which M. Yoruz promised to Turnish to Captain Bullock 56 guns and 12,000 shells.

Voruz promised to furnish to Captain Bullock 56 guns and 12,000 shells.

Finally, in a last letter not less explicit than the others, M. Arman proposes to "Mr. Maury, Rear Admiral of the Confederate States of America," to build in a shert time aix new tron-clad gunboats, according to plans communicated by Uapt. Jansen; and he promises, moreover, to furnish, one month after the signing of the contract, proof that he has in his possession the necessary authority to ship the armament intended to be placed on board the gunboats.

[Some correspondence then is published, but it has all, we believe, appeared in the two volumes of diplomatic correspondence issued in January by the State Department, and we do not reproduce it here. The article of the Opinions Nationals concludes as follows:

It might be supposed that this last letter of M. Drouyn de Lhuys closed the diplomatic difference which we have sketched. In fact, for a month or twe, the building of the ships, iron-clad and not, was suspended. But, if we are well informed, the work has been resumed for a considerable time, and at last two of the ships are ready to be delivered to the Confederate agents.

CUMBERLAND. April 11.—The mail train for the West, from Baltimore and Washington, arrived here on Saturday afternoon at the usual hour, with two special cars attached, in which were Vice President Hamlin and a beyy of Senators and Representatives from Washington, accompanied by their wives and daughters, to the number of twenty or more in all. This distinguished party left Washington in the morning on a trip of inspection of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and its teeming historical and scenic points of attraction.

its teeming historical and scenic points of attraction.

The train was greeted at the Relay by General Tyler, of General Wallace's Department; at Harper's Ferry by General Max Weber and Colonel Wells; at Martinsburg by Generals Averell and Shaw, all of whom paid their respects to the Vice President and his suite. At this place a grand salute from the new forts was fired as the train arrived, and Major-General Sigel and Staff, accompanied by Major-General Sigel and Staff, accompanied by Major-Generals Ord and Staff, waited on the tourists in their cars. General Sigel soon prevailed upon them to remain over night in our city, and partake of his hospitality. Their cars were accordingly detached from the train, and the company escorted to the General's headquarters, at the Revere House.

At nine o'clock at night the company were seated at the table in the dining hall of the Revere House, with General Sigel at their head, and the Vice President and lady on his right, to partake of an entertalument bounteously provided. In the course of the evening, General Sigel arges and addressed

Mr. Hamlin then responded quite eloquently to the General's remarks, thanking him for his courtesy, and expressing the great satisfaction which he and his distinguished companions had derived already from their tour of inspection over the great work they were now inspecting.

Senator Van Winkle made some remarks of the happiest character in reference to the organization and development of his State and the intimate alliance which it bore the Government, through the great instrumentality of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroed, coupling the name of Mr. Smith, it Master of Transportation, who was officially present, in connection with the occasion.

Mr. Smith was the next speaker, and confined his remarks to the difficulties with which his road had to contend during the war from all quarters, among which he intimated that the rebel raids were not altogether the most serious. He spoke particularly of the estimate that the Southern commanders had placed upon the road, and especially their most vigorous commander—the late Stonewall Jackson, who had devoted several of his most earnest campaigns to its destruction; but finding the Company as earnest as he was himself, in its own cause, and that it would repair damages as rapidly as be could make them, he was led to exclaim that if the Federal commanders were only as effective as the Railroad General, he could not successfully withstand them.

Jesterday merning the Vice President and his friends went to Wheeling, being escorred as far as Piedmont by Major Generals Sigel and Stahl.

Lay before yesterday Major McCabe, of the 13th Pennsylvania Volunteers, stationed at Brentsville, having received information that a squad of rebel cavalry were prowing about his division, started with a few picked men to attend to them. The Major's party were successful in their hunt, and returned to camp at night with three prisoners alive. A fourth one they found it necessary to extinguish before he would be taken. The prisoners belonged to the 15th Virginia rebel regiment.

WASHINGTON, April 13—The bridges along the railroad to Culpeper have been repaired, and trains are again running regularly. The army is mudbound, however, and the streams running through its lines are impassable. On Saturday, night the Rappahannock rose so rapidly that the engineers were compelled to take up the pontoon bridge in order to save it. No fears are entertained for the safety of the railroad bridge at that point, the river having fallen rapidly, and the drift wood gradually relieves the structure from the pressure.

Scouts report that Longstreet is in Riehmond with the greater pertion of bis army, and that many persons credit this statement.

Brutal Murder of A Scout.—Wm. J. Lawton, one of Gen. Thomas's most successful and daring scouts, was murdered on the evening of the 2d inst., at the house of Wm. Mahan, in Broomtown Valley, by the notorious bushwacker and guerilla, Jonas Andrews. Lawton, in company with two others, rode up to the house of Mahan, and asked his wife, who was standing at the door, if there was any person there. She replied: "No, there is no one here." Lawton then dismounted, and stepped inside the door, when Andrews, who had been concealed, stepped out, and shot him through the neck, causing instant death. After Andrews had killed Lawton, he shot at one of the men three times. He then turned, and ran out through the back door and yard into the woods, and made his escape. At the time of his death, Lawton was about twenty-six years of age. He was born in the State of Geergia, where he lived till he was ten years old, when his parents moved to Mount Clements, in the State of Michigan, where they now reside. He was known by most of the prominent Generals in the Army of the Potomac, where he served long and faithfully in the discharge of his duties.—Nathville Press.

THE QUOTA OF THE CRY.—No definite information can be obtained from the military authorties in regard to the quota of the city under the late calls of the President for troops, and under which the draft has been ordered. The number originally stated, about 19,000 was evidently wrong, but no reliable statement has been made. On several occasions facts and figures have been made use of by members of Council in specches, but nobody seemed 20 have any official information. The City Bounty Fund Commission have been very active in their endeavors to accertain the quota of the city, and in their investigations, have discerned various discrepancies in the credits to the city and State. It was stated by a member of the Common Council at the last meeting that the nine months men had been so apportioned as to give the State credit for 4,000 three years men. PARADE OF THE COLORED TROOPS.—The colored troops now stationed at Camp William Penn came into the city this morning, and made a short parade. The troops in line consisted of five companies of the 25th Regiment, Lient.-Col. Hitchcock; 32d Regiment, Col. G. W. Baird; and six companies of the 43d Regiment, Lient.-Col. Hall; the whole under the command of Col. Louis Wagner. Each regiment was accompanied by a full dram corps, and carried the colors. The men, with the exception of one company of the 43d Regiment, were all armed, and marched exceedingly well. The parade passed over the route published a day or two since, and though totally unexpected, the side-walks were pretty well lined with spectators. The troops were frequently cheered, and in some places flags were waved from the windows of dwelling houses as they passed. Major-General Cadwalader and staff reviewed the procession from the steps of his headquarters in Girard street.
