Mr. Chandler (Mich.) introduced a bill in addi-on to the several acts concerning the commercial atercourse between the loyal and insurrectionary tates, and to provide for the collection of aban-oned property, which authorizes the Secretary of he Treasury to designate places where abandoned property may be sold. In addition to those autho-ized by the act, it charges the agents with the case of abandoned lands for twelve months, and he employment and general welfare of all persons dease of abandoned lands for twelve months, and the employment and general welfare of all persons formerly held as slaves within the military lines. The property is to be regarded as abandoned where the owner is absent and engaged in the rebel service. The surplus proceeds, after deducting expenses, under the regulations of the Secretary, to be paid into the treasury. The prohibitions and provisions of the act of July, 1860, are extended to all commercial intercourse whatever within the military lines. Any portion of a loyal State over-true by the rebel raids or in immediate danger from them, is placed under the restrictions of the same act.

An amendment from the Naval Committee making an appropriation of fifteen thousand dolars for a cemetery for the navy and marine sorps, near Philadelphia, was adopted.

The amendment of Mr. Grimes providing that the Naval Academy shall be returned and established at the academy grounds, in Annapolis, on or before the Academic year in Sep ember, 1865, which had been adopted in Committee of the Whole, came up for a separate vote.

Mr. Anthony moved, as a substitute for the amendment, that the Seerctary of the Navy appoint a Board of five naval officers to examine and eport upon the most suitable place for the Naval Academy. After considerable debate, the substitute was rejected, and the amendment of Mr. Frimes was adopted—yeas 39, nays 10.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
Mir. Colfax said the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. endleton, asked on Tuesday where are we? He voild answer we are in the Capitol of the United tates, that Republic which still lives in spite of onspiracy and treason, of enemies open and coert, with or without arms in their bands, within ad without our lines, and which, thanks to God not to our gallant soldiers in the field, will live as ong as time shall last. At such a time and place, ith the enemy almost at the gates of our Capitol, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Long, declares that it courtry is dead and destroyed, and advocates ecognition to plack eleven States from our banner, receive in that diplomatic gallery an envoy ex-HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. eceive in that diplomatic gallery an envoy ex rdinary in the person of Mason or of Beaure aordinary in the fierson of Mason or of Beaureard, representing here a government founded on ar own soil, and the heights of Arlington to own with hostile batteries menacing our delibrations at this Capitol. The representative of the olumbus District, Mr. Cox, called his course straordinary. He had a parallel and a justification. That same gentleman announced in the ime speech that his Democratic colleagues from hio had met in caucus to disavow the sentiments this colleague, Mr. Long, and further than that, hat he Mr. Cox, was authorized so to declare. It was as extraordinary that thirteen gentlemen of lessme political party should deem it to be their uty to meet in caucus and authorize one of their aty to meet in caucus and authorize one of their umber to publicly disayow the speech, as for him offer the resolution. If that could be done for he interest of a party, why should he (Mr. Ool-kx) be criticised for asking the House to solemnly pudiate the speech for the interests of the burntry.

x) be criticised for asking the House to solemnly pudiate the speech for the interests of the bontry.

Mr. Pendleton remarked he did not know there ad been a caucus, and that his colleague, Mr. ox, had no authority to speak in his behalf.

Mr. Cox remarked—I desire to say that as to the ancus of Ohio Democrats, although I was not preent, eleven of my colleagues concurred in and uthorized the statement that they did not agree that the sentiments attr buted to my colleague, Ir. Long, were the sentiments of the Democracy. Mr. Colfax, resuming, repeated he had brought the sentiments are been defined in a spresentative. Mr. Mallory (Ky.) supposed the gentleman alluded to that period of 1812 when Mr. Clay descended from his position to reply to the remarks of Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, but Mr. Clay did not move a resolution of expulsion.

M. Colfax said that in Congress, in 1812 and 1813, Mr. Clay can e down from the chair nine times to make speeches at one session, and six times during the next censure or expel a member?

Mr. Mallory asked, did Mr. Clay ever move to censure or expel a member?

Mr. Colfax replied that Mr. Clay's speeches were on the side of his country, and that statesman did not hesitate about the words he used, which were far more severe than any he ever used here. Mr. Dawes called upon Mr. Mallory to state what language Josiah Quincy used to justify Mr. Clay's speech. Clay's speech.

Mr. Mallory did not recollect the precise words, but he recollected Mr. Quincy denounced the war as being causeless and against the interests of Mas-sachusetts, and one to which his constituents were opposed.

Mr. Dawes said Josiah Quincy was one of the most venerated and distinguished statesmen of the land, and he knew Mr. Quincy was opposed to the war of 1812, but as a lover of his country he had no equal at the time.

war of 1812, but as a lover of his country he had no equal at the time.

Mr. Mallory said the gentleman could not get Kentucky and Massachusetts into collision.

Mr. Colfax, resuming, said if any one had remarked at the time that traitors should be permitted to plant their Confederacy on our soil, he believed that Clay, with all his patriotic impetuosity, would have moved to expel the member from the floor. This was no gladiatorial arena, as called by Fernando Wood, as it was when men with weapons sought to suppress disunion in behalf of freedom. That time has passed away. They were here as patriots and as representatives to discharge the duties committed to their charge.

Mr. Colfax quoted some remarks attributed to Fernando Wood, when the latter said it was not true.

resultation wood, when the latter said it was not true.

Mr. Colfax said he took it from the New York Herald, and he supposed that was good anthority. If the gentleman said his Bergen speech was incorrectly reported, he would let it pass. His colleague (Mr. Yoorhees) had declared himself in favor of unlimited freedom of speech. If a man should rise here and advise the assassination of the President, would his colleague have advocated such freedom of speech? And yet the speech of the gentleman from Ohio had not only encouraged the assassination of the Republic, but also of the soldiers defending it. His colleague had quoted the inculcations of the Saviour. He (Mr. Colfax) had been taught to bow to them with respect, but he found the Saviour himself prohibited free speech when he prohibited profanity. His colleague said something about the Helper book, and which had been dug up from the past.

Mr. Rogers asked whether Mr. Giddings was censured, and under the previous question regarded it as a virtual expulsion and resigned. A widely circulated paper had compared Mr. Long of Chatham, and spoke of his resolution which he offered as a disgrace and outrage. He would retort on no one, but he wanted no nobler epitaph on his tombstone than that he had done his duty to his country according to his conscience. [Great Applause.] He wanted the rules to be enforced, as gentlemen on the other side insisted, who did not like these responses. He had sat here when the galleries had applauded for slavery, but had nothing but lowering brows and hisses for freedom; then there was only a mild robake. He would rather have the "God bless" you of some ploor soldier's widow, or of the lone soldier for which he much was sacrificed or periled, than the applause of galleries crowded with talent, heroism and beauty.

He was asked to give his name as recommending a work contrasting Northern with Southern arri. irue.

so much was sacrificed or periled, than the applause of galleries crowded with talent, heroism and beauty.

He was asked to give his name as recommending a work contrasting Northern with Southern agricultural prosperity, and he had found pretending extracts from it to be forgeries. After that old charge before his district he was re-elected by ten thousand majority, notwithstanding what had been said by the gentleman who had opposed the resolution. He (Mr. Colfax) contended that the speech of the gentleman from Ohio did encourage sedition, and would simulate such riots as had taken place in New York and Illinois, and would be halled with applause in Richmond, and in he rebel camps, and would discourage our veterans as they prepare for the battle. It would, if unrebuked here, justify Jeff. Davis and recognition meetings elsewhere. In the course of his remarks he said the presumed offence of Joshua B. Giddings, in 1842, was the declaration that slavery did not exist in ships of the United States on the high seas.

Mr. Colfax then proceeded to review Mr. Long's speech, and argued to show a complicity with treason and a willingness that traitors should triumph. The speech was an echo of Jefferson Davis himself, and throughout the whole of it there was not one syllable for our distressed and bleeding country. After alluding to the rebel barbarities, Mr. Colfax eaid there would not, as Mr. Long advived, be amicable actions with them. No, sir, the word will be found seated only on the grave of Treason. If our Constitution is destroyed, as the gentleman twice procraimed, and if the rebel have a government, as he asserts, then the only

If our Constitution is destroyed, as the an twice proclaimed, and if the rebel government, as he assessed in the rebel government, as he assessed in the rebel government. ave a government, as he asserts, then the only constitution alive was that framed at Montomery. Mr. Colfax read and commented on various ex-racts from Mr. Long's speech, in which he harged the inauguration of the war on Mr. Lincharged the inauguration of the war on Mr. Lincolr, which said the rebels would spill the last drop of blood in resistance; which declared that those forced to take the amnesty oath would depise its authority; that he (Mr. Leng) had ever since 1861 regarded the attempt to preserve the Government and retain our territory as a mistaken ieae; that we should not seek to extend our jurisdiction over a hostile people; that our battlefields were words of disuntion and division; that the Republic was dead and destroyec; that our Government was completely overthrown, and that every vertige of our Constitution had been destroyed. Mr. Colfax asked if so, how he could dare to swear to support it. If Republic, Government and the Constitution, in Mr. Long's opinion, as expressed in his speech, were all destroyed, he must have felt his oath a fullity, andought not to wish to legislate here.

He was commenting on Mr. Long's declaration of recognition when his hour expired and he asked for a few minutes more as promised on the other side when he yelded to their interruption and explanation.

Mr. Ancona (Pa.)—The unanimous consent of the Bouse was heretofore given to Mr. Allen. I am no party to the objection.

Mr. Long appealed to the Chamber as a personal favor to himself to extend the courtesy to the speaker.

Mr. Oolfax wanted no repenting concession from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Colfax wanted no repenting concession from the gentleman from New Xork.
Mr. Chanler—Well I accept. [Applause.]
Mr. Long, who had obtained the floor, said he was very sorry Mr. Chanler had made the objection. He would ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow Mr. Colfax to print the remainder of his speech, and trusted this would be granted.
Mr. Colfax said, "I don't print what I do not utter."

Mr. Colfax said, "I don't print what I do not utter."

Mr. Long said he would not now speak but for the peculiar manner in which the debate had beer conducted, and its importance to him individually.

In emtering the Hall on Saturday morning he had heard the Olerk, in a clear, shrill voice, reading a resolution for his expulsion. He was still further surprised when he saw that the Speaker of the House had left his exalted position and had moved that resolution, and was not less surprised at that gentleman's ifften-minute speach. He did not object to the gentleman's offering the resolution; he did not impugn his motives; he did not doubt his right to offer it. He had, with a few exceptions, only been treated with the highest regard and consideration by the members, and, therefore, he had no fault to find.

sideration by the members, and, therefore, he had no fault to find.

They had not impugned his motives or his honesty. For what was he arraigned before this great and august assemblage? What was the sum of his offence, and was he fit to associate with these gentlemen? Was it that he had lost his self-respect, and had done anything worthy of censure? For four months he had occupied a seat here, and now this extraordinary charge was brought against him. Some of his own friends had taken occasion to put themselves in opposition to him, and the Republicans had also been very careful to do the same. He asked gentlemen to approach the subject now before them with care. He might be in error, but his conscience and judgment told him he was not:

error, but his conscience and judgment told him he was not:

He repeated that he had declared his deliberate convictions and had quoted in his own support the views and had followed the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Stevens). He said at the time he would take shelter under the broad mantle of that gentleman. If you, Mr. Long said, condemn me, to be consistent, you must condemn your distinguished leader. Be just, though the heavens fail. Rise above party. Make no difference in your action between what is nitered by a Republican and a gentleman on the Democratic side. Act above party, if you must make a martyr censure us both. I will shield myself under the broad mantle of the flistinguished leader of the Republican party. He wanted pears to the country rather than the extermination of these people who are struggling in a cause which they believe to be right, but which we in the baginning thought to be wrong. The Speaker of the House knew that he intended to make that speech.

Mr. Colfax here said that he did not know its speech.

Mr. Colfax here said that he did not know its Mr. Colfax here said that he did not know its character.

Mr. Long referred to the speech of Mr. Kelley, who had said that if he (Mr. Long) had utfered his sentiments in a crowd of five hundred soldiers there was not one but what would have brained him for what he had uttered here with impunity. He meant the gentleman who plays Forrest here for the amusement of the House. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Penusylvaria was his native State. He honored her sons in the field and elsewhere, but he despised the man who thus appealed to the soldiers.

Mr. Cox moved to lay the resolution to censure Mr. Long upon the table. This was disagreed to. The first resolution for the soldiers.

A CRUISE AFTER REBEL PIRATES—ARRI-VAL OF THE GUNBOAT MOHICAN AT THE NAVY YARD. The United States gunboat Mohican arrived at the Philadelphia Navy Yard last evening, from the coast of Brazil. She has been on special ser-vice since the 23d of October, 1562. The first seven months of the cruise were passed in the neighbor-hood of the Cape de Verde Islands, and thence towards the equator, visiting and examining all sus-picious vessels, both in port and at sea.

In May, 1863, intelligence reached the Mohican o hood of the Cape de Verde Islands, and thence towards the equator, visiting andexamining all suspicious vessels, both in port and at sea.

In May, 1603, intelligence reached the Mohican of the ravages which piratical cruisers were making among American merchant vessels on and in the neighborhood of the coast of Brazii. Half an hour afterward the Mohican was under way for that it cality, and making a rapic passage, arrived of Pernambuco on the 19th of the same month, unhappily to find that the rebe! vessel Florida had leit that port but three days before. Being out of ecal, the Mohican was obliged to enter the port and obtain a supply, after which, on the 21st, she sailed for Bahia, arriving there on the 33d, again to be disappointed, the rebel vessels Alabama and Georgia having escaped forty-eight hours previous, after having taken in supplies of coal, provisions, and some arms. Two ships, however, loaded with coal and other stores, professedly for the Emperor of China, but in reality intended for the rebel squadron, were lying there, intending to meet the steamers at some outpost on the coast, but they were so well blockaded in port that they were finally reduced to self their cargoes at a sacrifice in "Bahia." The Mohican explored all the small ports and harbors along the rebel sympathizers that their friends, the Alabama, Florida, and Georgia, have not since made their appearance in that neighborhood.

In Angust last an attempt was made to fit out a number of rebel merchant vessels (lying in Rio de Janeilo) under British colors, and one of them went to sea, but, finding the Mohican in chase, they pruden'tly retired within the marine league, re-entered the port, and, after waiting several weeks for an opportunity to escape, gave it up, and the whole if we have been since dismantled and laid up in ordinary.

The cruise of the Mohican was extended as far as the Cape of Good Hope and the cities of the La Plata, visiting all the intermediate islands, but no indications of an enemy were seen. In all this time she
