EXXVIIITH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION: CLOSE OF YESTERDAY'S PROCEEDINGS

SENATE.—Mr. Howard, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported Mr. Sherman's bill, with important amendments. No United States bonds are authorized, but the several railroad companies may issue their own bonds in sums of ome thousand dollars, payable thirty years after date, bearing six per cent. Interest, payable in gold or silver coin, semi-annually, at the rate of $24,000 for each mile completed and equipped to the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains, and $95,000 for each mile for one hundred and iffy miles west of said base and eastwardly from the western base of the Siera Nevada, $48,000 for each mile between the mountain sections, and $24,000 for each mile between the mountain sections, and $24,000 for each mile west of the base of Sierra Nevada. On these bonds the Secretary of the Treasury shall endorse the payment of interest for nineteen years, and pay absolutely the first year's interest as a gratuity. It authorizes the construction of bridges over the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, not less than ninety feet above low water mark, nor more than forty feet above high water.

On motion of Mr. Anthony (R. I.) it was SENATE. -Mr. Howard, from the Committee on feet above high water.

Mr. Lane called up the House bill to amend the enrollment act so as to raise the rank, pay and emoluments of the Provost Marshal General to those of a Brigadier-General. After a short debate it was passed. A message was received from the the House, an-nouncing their adherence to the disagreement on the bill establishing a Territorial Government for Montana, and asking for a Committee of Conference.

Mr. Sherman (Ohio) explained that however much he might be disposed to vote that the Senate recede, he thought it necessary for one reason to appoint a committee to meet that of the House. recede, he thought it necessary for one reason to appoint a committee to meet that of the House. The difficulty with the bill was that in its present shape persons from Canada could come into the Territory, without declaring their intention to become citizens, and vote. This should be provided against in the bill.

Mr. Doolittle (Wis.) thought the question for which the Senate contended was an abstract one. There was not now, nor would there be, any number of negroes in Montana, and we were legislating against an emergency which would never occur in

Mr. Wilkinson (Minn.) moved that the Senate adhere to its amendment, and agree to the request for snother contarging. for another conference.

Mr. Hale (N. H.) denied that the principle of the

Mr. Hale (N. H.) denied that the principle of the Senate's amendment was a mere abstraction. It was establishing a precedent of freedom for the territory for all time to come. The bill, without the Senate amendment, would allow the inhabitants of the young territory to be educated in the barbarous ideas of slavery, which had done so much injury in times past.

Mr. Trumbull (Ill.) thought the tendency of this amendment was to alienate loyal men and help the rebellion. Mr. Hale was mistake in saying that this was not an abstraction. The bill steel defined the rights of suffrage, and the very first legislature which would meet in the territory would dispose of the question for itself. A great deal had been said about negro equality, and the equality of all men and women too, before the law, and it had been urged that it mattered not whether the means by which this was secured were constitutional or not. This Government could not be the means by which this was secured were consti-tutional or not. This Government could not be saved unless we saved it under the Constitution. waved unless we saved it under the Constitution. We were fighting for liberty regulated by law, and so far from strengthening the Government and weakening the rebellion, you divide the sentiment of the people of the North whenever you undertake to pass an unconstitutional act. The position of the Southern States was based upon the pretenes that the Government, under pretext, has usurped and exercised powers not warranted by the Constitution. He did not say these charges were just always, but we should avoid even the appearance of violating the Censtitution. We wanted no divisions in this country except between patriots and traitors. He was sorry that the proposition was introduced here, thence to be sent out for discussion before the people on the stump in the coming campaign.

Mr. Fessenden objected to further debate, the morning hour having expired.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of the House Legislative, Executive and Judiciary Appropriation bill.

An amendment of Mr. Anthony was adopted, providing for the publication of the laws in localities contiguous to the rebellions States, that their dissemination amongst them may be better re-

After a few unimportant amendments the bill was passed.

Mr. Sumner called up the bill to repeal all acts passage.

Mr Sumrer said he did not intend to say a word about the bill. It was as plain as the multiplication table, a diary, or the Ten Commandments constraint able, a diary, or the Ten Commandments (Laughter.)

Mr. Hendricks did not think there should be such an amendment to the Constitution as this. It might be as plain as the multiplication table, but it was doubtful to him whether the high morality of the Ten Commandments would sanction its passage. It was decided in 1793, and again in 4850, to be lawful and expedient. The Fugitive Slave law has been decided to be constitutional by every court of the United States, and reaffirmed by the people. Now, while the Constitution remains unchanged and its provisions are obligatory upon us as members of Congress, it is proposed to repeal it. While he was not a member from a slave State; he would vote against his bill so long as the oath he had taken to support the Constitution was upon his conscience.

Mr. Sherman always thought the law of 1850 unconstitutions!

Mr. Sherman always thought the law of 1850 un-constitutional, and had no objection to its repeal now. He doubted the propriety of going back as far as 1763, and would give the loyal people of the South all their constitutional rights. South all their constitutional rights Mr. Sumner wanted to make a clean sweep while we were at it, and wipe out the barbarous while we were at it, and wipe out the barbarous code from our statutes.

Mr. Sherman would vote against the bill because he did not wish to extend the repeal back to the law of 1793. The States, to a great extent, in which this law of 1793 was operative were for themselves rapidly perfecting measures of entire emancipation. He moved to amend the bill by inserting "except the act approved February 12th, 1793, for the rendition of persons to service or labor."

Mr. Johnson regretted the proposed action, not because it would have any effect in returning a single slave, but upon other grounds. The Constitution not only authorized the acts of 1792 and 1850, but the framers of that instrument thought it just and necessary to have some such law. Even if these laws, as an original proposition, were maintained to be unconstitutional, the Constitutionities of the memory of Justice Story, who had been referred to the memory of Justice Story, who had respect to the memory of Justice Story, who had been referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, (Mr. Sumner,) he thought he had suffered by his failure to convey the true meaning and effect of his decision upon the act of 1793.

In regard to the act of 1850 the Supreme Court, in the case of Booth, by a unanimous decision was a summer or the summer of the summe in the case of Booth, by a unanimous decision confirmed its constitutionality. He would inquir what practical good was to be the result of thi measure, and thought it might create unpleasant feelings amongst the people of States which are sectionally loyal, and amongst the loyal people of States which are sectionally disloyal. If, as the Senator says, the bill purposes to repeal odious laws, and that it is as clear as the multiplication table, certainly it is a reproach to keep them on our statute books.

But he supposed the men who formed the Constitution knew its meaning and true intent as well as the Senator from Massachusetts or others in this bocy. The President of the convention which framed it, coming from a slave State, knew what the clause of 1753 meant. Many of the men whe passed the act of 1793 were members of the subsequent Congress, and if the Senator would look at their proceedings he would find that no one attempted to breathe a suspicion that it was not constitutional or expedient. tempted to breathe a suspicion that it was not constitutional or expedient.

Mr. Summer replied, whatever the framers of the Constitution might have meant, the words of the Constitution did not say slaves, but persons.

Mr. Johnson said every member of the Convention knew what he meant, and what every other member meant.

A long colloquy ensued between Messrs. Sumner and Johnson as to the decision of Chief Justice Story and its effect on the law of 1793.

Mr. Sumner read from the decision, and said it clearly gave the right of trial by jury to a fugitive. Viewed in this light the Constitution was clearly on the side of human freedom. The Senator from Maryland said the bill was not practicable. If it be practicable to relieve us from an unconstitutional and odious system: te relieve our names from the shame it carries into foreign lands, to do justice to an oppressed race, thus securing the layor of hiving Provicence, to relieve ourselves and country, then the proposition upon which you are called to vote is as practicable as humanity.

We are not aware of the beavy burden our country is bearing amongst civilized nations in austaining the odious system of human slavery. Genius has represented its enormities in marble and on canvass; literature and art, in all their varied forms, have exposed its horrors; while those who miny and taunted our friends with it, that professing to be the freest nation on the globe, while were no better than Jeff. Davie's government. It was in vain that we inquire into disasters to our armies, and lament such massacres as those of Fort Wagner and Fort Pillow, if we still continue disavor of God.

Mr. Morrill then exatained at length the prominent features of the Internal Tax bill.

Mr. Stebbins (N. Y.) said the preservation of the credit of the country demands the passage of this bill, and taxation sufficient for our demands both during, and after the war. It was the point on which the struggle in which we are now engaged must ultimate turn. The Government, under the Constitution, is putting forth its power to preserve the nation at life, and performing its solemn duty in devising the means for the accomplishment of the great work. Our means are far more ample than ever before existed, and more extensive than these of any country on the face of the globe. This he proceeded to show by Laference to official records. The war, he said, though requiring so many millions of expenditure, had been carried on at at expense less than the agricultural products of the country, while the resources have not been diminished to the extent of a single dollar. Furnishing the means of war within ourselves, will tend to develop still more our industry, and show the overwhelming power of this nation. This bill was a part of the great chain forged by this Congress to hold the nation together from the struggle of eight millions of people to preserve their social institutions. He could not doubt that the war will be of long continuance, and terminate only when the rebels shall submit themselves to the Constitution and laws. Therefore the nation should place itself in the strongest position, and guard against everly possible approach of exhaustion.

Mr. Stebbins reviewed the recuperative energies of the British, drawing a striving contrast between the rebels shall submit themselves to the Constitutional banks must take the place of the State banks, as they could not .o exist, and expressed himself in favor of tax on sales of gold and sterling exchange as a ource of revenue.

The nation, he remarked, was destined to cover the continen HOUSE OF BEPRESENTATIVES.

believed Congress would receive the blessings of he people.

Mi Brooks (N. Y.) remarked while listening to the glowing accounts of the gentleman from Yermont and his colleague he had imagined he was wandering in the picture galleries of Versailles, or among the sculptures of the Yatican, where men were represented in armor and depicting war, but without the actual scenes of battle. He had almost come to the conclusion that war is a blessing, and debt a Divine institution. The gentleman from Vermont had mentioned the important fact that this bill will produce two hundred and fifty milions, while his colleague placed the amount at three hundred milions of dollars, with ninety millions from fereign imports, adding three hundred and forty millions of dollars to the public revenue. His colleague had held up for imitation the British system of debt and taxation which had driven the subjects of the kingdom of Great Britain, Ireland, and Scotland to our shores. Taxation does not always produce revenue, and this point he proceeded to argue. All the inflation of prices since December last from the smaller articles of consumption, tea and coffee, to the largest, neef and pork, and bread, has been occasioned by the addition by the Secretary of the Treasury of St40,000 beyond what he promised at that time. He (Mr. Brooks) said that unless the currency is curticled and the expansioh lessened, we will approach a crisis from which no army can rescue the property and labor of the country. There is no crime so great as an unnecessary increase of paper money. It is robbery in the worst form, and serves to corrupt the morals of the people. The only way to reduce importation is to check the expense on the currency. The necessity of ending the war is apparent. He did not believe with his collesgue, Mr. Stebbins, that we can endure a war indefinitely without bankruptcy. The main object of his argument was to produce a curtailment of currency.

Mr. Kasson (Iowa), alluding to the remarks of him. Brooks, said ha bad heep a Whig Then. he people.
Mi. Brooks (N. Y.) remarked while listening to Surrency.

Mr. Kasson (Iowa), alluding to the remarks of Mr. Brooks, said he had been a Whig, then a Know-Nothing and now a Democrat. The gentieman from New York had defended the Irish, which was not in accordance with his former know-Nothing principles. Know-Nothing principles.
Mr. Brooks denied that he ever belonged to the Know-Nothing party, or had ever been in a Know-Nothing lodge.
Mr. Kasson then pointed to the sentiments of the apress, of which the gentleman was part proprie-Mr. Brooks replied that he was in Europe waen hat party was organized.

Mr. Kasson said the gentleman being a foreigner, re, of course, could not nold him responsible. He then briefly defended the Sereiary of the Treasury from the charge that the latter had inflated the currency. The inflation was by the State banks in New York, as the premium on Saturday on the national currency, as contrasted with the State issues demonstrated. New York, as the premium on Saturday on the national currency, as contrasted with the State issues, demonstrated.

Mr. Fernando Wood, (N. Y.) assumed that the present bill to meet immense expenditures grew out of this war, and, therefore, it was legitimate to discuss every question pertaining to the war. He was in favor of giving a liberal support to the Government. In this emergency he was not prepared to criticise too severely the administration of public affairs. He believed that the Administration had undertaken a task for which no man or set of men were competent; hence there should be the largest generosity for the mistakes which had been made. He then proceeded to examine the financial question, reviewing the acts of the Secretary of the Treasury, in this connection, in condemnation. He said this was the first time in the history of the world when any people or government had departed from the common sense principles of finance in the endeavor to susfain the Government and prosecute a war. The pending bill was full of errors. He wanted a measure equitable and fair, and all interests to contribute to the taxation.

The committee then rose.

was full of errors. He wanted a measure equitable and fair, and all interests to contribute to the taxation.

The committee then rose.

Mr. Garileid (Ohio) said—In my response to my colleague, Mr. Long, a few days since, I asserted that many leaders of the Democratic party in the North were in correspondence with rebel leaders, and I promised to produce the letters to which I then referred. We found that some of our regiments in the Army of the Cumberland were being corrupted and induced to desert, by politicians at home, and secret-service men were empleyed to find out who was doing it.

One young man went to Indiana, and by representing himself as friendly to the rebels obtained these letters. He brought them to me I did not know the writers, but called several Indiana officers to examine them, and found from those who knew the handwriting and the history of the writers. I took tracings of the letters and sent the geout with the originals through the lines.

Evening Session.—The Raritan and Delaware Bay Railroad bill was taken up, when Mr. Wilson (lows) offered a substitute therefor, viz:

That for the better regulation of commerce among the several States, every railroad company in the United States whose road is operated by steam be and is hereby authorized to transport freight and passengers from one State to another, anything in any law of any State to the contrary not withstanding.

On motion of Mr. Yeaman (Ky.), the consideration of the bill was postponed for two weeks.

The House passed the bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge over the falls of the Obio, near Louisville.

Mr. Rice (Me.) reported a bill setting apart the old Hall of Representatives as a national statuary hall, the saveral statuare to be in marble or prouze, not exceeding two in number for each of their most illustrious civil or military men. The bill appropriates $20,000 for the necessary arrangements.

Mr Morrill (Vt.) said the old Senate chamber has been assigned to the Supreme Court, but the old hall is an unappropriated waste, draped with cobwebs. He urged that from its grandeur of style and its legislative associations it could be appropriated to no more fitting or patriolic purpose. The bill was passed.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill reported from the Select Committee providing for the reconstruction of the overthrown or rebellious States.

the reconstruction of the overthrown or rebellious States.

James C. Allen (III.), a member of that committee, opposed the bill, arguing that the power proposed to be exercised is not conferred by the Constitution. Our political fabric is now shaken to its centre. Aubition, civil war, and threatening national bankrupicy are testing the strength of ofour system, and the triends of free government everywhere are waiting to rejoice at its triumph or weep over its downfall. He feared to launch on unknown seas, but preferred to be guided by the checks furnished by the fathers of the republic. The bill was framed on the assumption that these rebellious States are out of the Union. If he believed this he would regard this war as a sin, and waged only for revenge and plunder.

This bill would serve only to increase the present discord. A large portion of the South seceded because they thought their rights would be insecure under the party now in power. If we desire them to return we must remove the cause of their apprehension. This measure actually proposed to accomplish what the South feared previous to their secession. He argued that no necessity exists for this bill, for when the military power shall be suppressed the people returning to their allegiance will see that all their offices are filled by men who will respect the authority of the United States.

Mr. Smithers (Del.) said that speedy action on

Mr. Smithers (Del.) said that speedy action on this bill seemed apparent. Already by the proclamation of the President, and pronunciamentos of military commanders, the people of the rebellious States are invited to reorganize civil governments. Unless Congress defines the terms on which representatives may be admitted here, the way of reconstruction will be rendered more difficult. The first principle provided by the bill is that until the State shall be free from military resistance, the President shall appoint a governor ad interim to conduct the civil administration, while facilities are to be afforded for instituting a permanent government. The bill provides for the calling of a convention, thus recognizing the right of the people to form their own organic laws. Amongst other provisions, involuntary servitude is prohibited. The Constitution, he argued, is required to guarantee to every state a republican form of government. The principle is laid down by Vattel, that if a nation is obliged to preserve its members. Mr. Smithers (Del ) said that speedy action on then is obliged to preserve used, it is coniged to preserve its members.

He further explained the provisions of the bill, showing that the loyal people alone were to be placed in possession of the civil government.

At 10 o'clock P. M. the House adjourned.
