The customs and duties, thus pledged for the payment of the interest and gradual 'extinction of No. 816 CHESTNUT STREET, the principal-through annual purchases for the sinking fund-of he funded public debt of the United tates, constitute a system of indirect taxation, to which the people are and always have been accustomed. It falls upon the people only in proportion to their ability or inclination to consume foreign wares and merchandise, upon which these duties are levied. As they elect to forego the use of foreign luxuries, so they lighten their own burden of the public debt, even while investing their means in it at rates and on a security superior to any other stock, for uniform and assured income (free of local laxes), in the whole country.

The last fiscal year, to June 30, 1863, this source of revenue amounted to $69,059,642. The gold interest on the public debt then amounted to only $24,729 S46, and the principal of the eld loan of 1842. 83.250.000, was paid off in gold, in addition. Here in Pennsylvania we see the county and district will be Brigadier-General Alfred Sully, a conventions, all over the State, instructing gallant Pennsylvania officer, and the son of their delegates to the Union State and National Conventions to vote for his re-nomi--nation. The State Convention meets to-day at Harrisburg, and, so far as can be judged from the action of the local conventions, there will be little or no opposition to Mr. Lincoln.

The admirable letter of the President to Col. Hodges, of Kentucky, on the slavery question, which we published yesterday, must have been read with pride and pleasure by all his friends. In his own peculiar, terse language, he defines his position with perfect clearness. The candor with which his views are stated, and the simple narration of the phases through which his mind passed, before, as the sworn President of the United States, he decided in favor of emancipating the slaves and employing negroes as soldiers, are new proofs of his perfect honesty. This letter is timely, and its appearance must satisfy the people anew that they can make no mistake in re-electing Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency.

THE HUMANITABIAN ASPECTS OF THE WAR.

It is a relief to turn from the horrible details of Southern butcheries; Southern hunting down of conscripts, with bloodhounds; Southern persecutions of Union men and their families, and from the general ruin and desolation that the madness of Secession has wrought in Southern homes, to the great humanitarian aspect of the war as developed in the loyal States. Our own city is by no means an exception to the general rule; but a review of what Philadelphia alone has accomplished in the way of patriotic humanity, during the three years which have elapsed since domestic traitors degraded the old flag at Fort Sumter, is a source of honest pride to every lover of the city founded by the benevolent Friends. These good works commenced in the very first week of the war. During those few anxious days our City Councils appropriated a noble sum of money for the purpose of supporting the families of those who had taken the field; private hospitality and liberality organized the Volunteer Refreshment Saloons: men, women and children vied with each other in preparing not only for the wants of the soldiers in the field, but in providing luxuries for them; and when the returning tide brought to our doors the sick and the maimed who had suffered in the cause of their country, the fireman came forward with his original and characteristic ambulance system, and gentle women were to be
