hold they have taken. The Newsen Theso for or cay, has the following account of the capture of the town: On Sunday last, the 'ith instant, a formid ible confederate force, numbering some twelve thousand or fifteen thousand men, made their appearance in iront of Plymouth, and about 5 o' clock P. M. commenced a vigorous and determined attack upon our outworks, and kept up the figh until two hours after dark. The rebels brought a large artillery train of heavy rifled guns, and a large force of sharpshooters. On Monday morning, at 5 o' clock, the rebels opened fire again on Fort Gray, and mide a dosperate assault on what is known as the "Eighty-trade assault on what is known as the "Eighty' fifth Redoubt,'' from its having been built by that regiment. This assault was repulsed oy our troops with great slaugher among the rebels. The field about three-quarters of a mile from the fortifications and of the objection of the Born the fortifications and of the rebel lines, and copened fire upon our lines. A gun from Fort Wessel's opened on this section with grape and canister Every torse connected with the rebel has tray was hot, and nearly every man was hit. In connection with this section with grape and canister Every torse connected with the rebel has tray was bot, and nearly every man was hit. In connection with this section with grape and canister forts. A gun from Sort Gray, williams, and Wessels, which were galantly repulsed. The rebel incr-clad, Reanoke, is within a short

The rebel iron-clad, Roanoke, is within a short. distance of Plymouth, some five or six miles. The plan seems to be to commence these boats in the interior, and then as the work progresses, move them into deep be to commence these boats in the interior, and then as the work progresses, move them into deep waler. The troops at Plymonth are fighting manfally, and to use the words of the navy commander in the Albemarle, 'ifghting like the devil.'' Night and day, they stand up to their work like herces. Brigadier-General Wessels is in command of the Albemarle sob-district, and his army idolize him. He will do all in his power, and, we doubt not, give a good account of himself and his brave boys. At there o'clock on Tuesday morning the iron-clad ram made its appearance, and came through the blockade, firing one gun. As she opened her port to fire a second time, one of the gunboats plumped a shell through the port into her interior. She steamed directly for the Southfield, and, run-ning her prow under the bows, sunk the South-field. Turing the engagement Gommander O. W. Flusser was killed. With his own hands he trained one of his gurs upon the ram, when the shell rebounded upon his own deck and exploded, killing hum instantly. The ram immediately steamed between Plymouth and the mouth of the river.

steamed between Plymouth and the mouth of the river. Wedneeday the cannonading was resumed, and, communication being cut off with Plymouth by means of the ram, we baye no positive news. A rumor reaches us that Gen. Wessels and his troops are concentrated in one of the forts with ammuni-tion and subsistence to enable them to withstand a siege. Heavy firing at Plymouth was heard at Bachelor's Creek during Tuesday night and Wed-nesday morning, which indicated that the gallant Wessels and his heroic men were there undismayed and unconquered.
