An Elephant "Bait." A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette, writing from Baroda, describes an elephant "bait," held in the presence of the Guico war. He says: The courtyard in which these exhibitions take place is an immense piece of ground, surrounded by stone walls, which are 14 feet above the ground. About every seven or eight yards ground. About every seven or eight yards round these walls are archways, which lead through into an open space outside, and these holes serve as "escapes" for the hunter men when the elephant approaches too closely. Two gates at either end of the courtyard are guarded by very thick wooden bars, and in the centre of the yard are one or two circular parapets and buildings, which also afford a refuge for the men who are pursued. About 60 or 70 men were down in the courtyard, armed with spears, whips and fireworks. Each man holding a piece of colored cloth endeavored to irritate the elephant that was loose in the midst of them, and their endeavors were considered successful and were rewarded if the irate monster rushed after them. The nearer they are approached the louder the applause and the more fearful the excitement, and as the poor tiny-looking mortal rushes away for his life, and just as it is expected the elephant can seize him, turns into one of the sheltering archways, whilst the monster rushes with full force against the wall, showering the bricks and mortar all around, the consternation reaches a elimax; the scenes of this description are repeated over and over again, and each one tries to be nearer death than the other.

If the elephant approaches too quickly, or any danger is really apparent, a large fire-work is exploded in his face, which generally stops him, and by the assistance of the smoke the man usually gets away. On this occasion under notice two or three very narrow escapes took place. One time th elephant was very close to one of the spear-men, and a firework was lighted and presented at the furious beast. No halt took place, but the elephant turning on the man who held the rocket, rushed through the smoke and came close upon him. Shrieks now rent the air all round, and for some moments the man was counted as killed, but with great presence of mind he threw the firework, phizzing and blazing away, into the beast's face, and ran for his life. collect himself were sufficient to give the poor fellow a start, and he just got into shelter in time to feel the trunk of the elephant on his shoulder. The other escape was equally narrow, and occurred through a young man running too far; the monst was gaining on him at every stride. By the most severe exertion the man reached the gate and rolled himself under the wooden bar. The prettiest portion of the exhibition was, however, without doubt, a horse who was brought in, and who from a thorough training, and evidently a knowledge of its own powers, approached the elephant very

The horse was ridden by a very clever rider, who with great skill managed to evade every charge of the infuriated creature. The quickness with which the horse could double or turn a corner gave it a marked advantage over the unwieldy elephant. When his Highness has been pleased sufficiently, the process of catching the mad elephant is commenced, and this, more frequently than not, is more exciting than even the "bait" itself. Men approach behind very cautiously with large iron clamps, and try to place one of these wea-pons, armed with spikes, round the hind leg of the elephant. Cunning by nature, the beast often allows them to approach and then suddenly charges; or he may seize the instrument just at the moment, and fling it into the air with a satisfactory roar. Ultimately, however, every one has to succumb and if once the clamp is put on, they are powerless to run. Thick ropes now fasten him safely, and he is led captive by men who would be but as insects in comparison with his unfettered strength.

SCRIPTTRE MISQUOTATIONS BY MEN OF LETTERS.—The late Bishop of London had a good story of an old woman who, having adopted a little girl from the work-house, and brought her up till she was mid way in her teens, was then forsaken by her charge, whom a neighboring farm house enticed away to "better herself." condoled with on this ungrateful abandon ment, by sympathizing friends, the poor old woman meekly answered that Scripture warned us that such things must happen. "You know it is said there, "Train up a child, and away he do go." There are acsomplished men of letters whose quotations of Scripture, or indirect reference to it, though hardly so ludicrous, is not much more accurate than that of Bishop Blomfield's ancient dame. One scarcely knows what to make of Horace Walpole's confusion of Cain with Samson, in one of his letters to a clerical friend too, panegyrizing a certain noble but childless couple, and their Eden-like existence at Nuneham: "I do not know the Paradise on earth I prefer to it, with its Adam and Eve; who may comfort themselves with having no chil when they recollect that the first-born committed murder with the jawbone of an ass, a deadly weapon I am sure." italics, whatever they may be worth, are Walpole's own.

"What says Timothy?" is Mr. Fonblanque's query in introducing the words of St. Paul, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." William Hazlitt ascribes to "the Samaritan"—whoever that may be—the publicants prayer, which he thus verbally misquotes, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." Leigh Hunt tells of Shelley that he was a student of the Book of Job, and that for his Christianity he went to "the Gospel of St. James." It must have been purely a slip of the pen with Mr. Thackeray to write of Amelia Osborne and her boy, that the fond mother had "made some little shirts for him," when he left home to stay with his rich grandfather; "but when her Eli came to see the widow. they were replaced by much finer linen."
That the author of "Vanity Fair" did not really confound Eli with Samuel is obvious from his distinct mention of the child Samuel again in connection with Hannah, in an earlier chapter of that fiction. That versatile and vivacious critic, M. Philarete Chasles, whose reputation for scholarship is not inconsiderable, permits himself, in one of his autobiographical souvenirs of life in England, to make a Northumbrian "puritan." who yearned to convert him, refer to Korah, Dathan, and Abiram as the favored three upon whom the fiery furnace had no

M. de Sainte Beuve, again, whom a Saturday Reviewer the other day pronounced the first of living critics, speaks of Cowper's attention being fixed by a verse in Sain Paul's "Third Epistle to the Romans." This has its parallel, however, as a blunder of Mr. Charles Dickens. Dr. Blimber, the schoolmaster at Brighton; to whose tender mercies little Paul Dombey is consigned, having occasion to set an imposition, does so in these terms: "Johnson will repeat to me to morrow morning," before breakfast, without book, and from the Greek Testament, the First Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians." Rather hard upon Johnson. But it would have been a deal harder had Doctor Blimber imposed upon him the second epistle, for where in the world could Johnson have got a copy? Mr. Dickens subsequently inserted an erratum about this. In an earlier fiction by the same author, we meet with the following curious passage: "The only Scriptural admonition that Ralph Nickleby heeded, in the letter, was, 'Know thyself.'"—Churchman. "The only Scriptural admonition
