Captain Gronow, the Anthor Captain Gronow, late of the British Life Gnards, whose interesting memoirs have made his name famous to all general readers, died in Paris, on Monday, the 20th of November. Captain Gronow, who was in the Guards at Waterloo, was one of the old school, and had probably seen as much as any man of the day. Of his personal appearance and career a Paris correspondence thus speaks: Who does not remember that small, neat, soldierlike figure, as erect in 1865 as when he was drilled at St. James' Palace in 1812? Who does not remember that handsome old man's face, with the quick eye that made ot of his own or per him the best pistol shot of his own or haps any other day? Who that kne ever conversed with Gronow long without hearing an anecdote of the past courts, camps and miscellaneous fashionable world? It was in 1862 that Captain Gronow published the first volume of his "Reminiscences," and in that book will be found the nost conspicuous events of his eventful life. It was written in Paris, with the assis tance of some literary friends, to whom had been submitted the fragmentary manuscript. Two other volumes of a similar nature have since appeared; and I believe a fourth volume of anecdotes is now in the press. The four volumes did not exhaust his store of gossiping narratives about all-classes of society; but during the last half century many of the remaining fragments are of too personal and domestic a nature to be given to the world. Captain Gronow, the son of a Welsh gentleman, commenced military career in 1813, when he joined the expedition to Spain under the Duke of Web lington. After going through the excite ment of that brief campaign he returned to England, and was one of the conspicuous and fashionable men about town; a gallant in the drawing-room, an amusing gossiper at the clubs—in fact, one of that sort of men who are occasionally taken up instinctively by royalty and some of the higher mem-bers of aristocratic society. The demands of the service soon took him back to the Continent again, and he found himself at the battle of Waterloo, an interesting de-scription of which is given in the first volume of the deceased soldier's "Reminis-

The best known events of Capt. Gronow's life occurred when the allies entered Paris The young soldier was one of the fashionflaneurs of the city, and passed his time among the military conglomeration of several European nations. Society was characterized by the prevalence of gambling and dueling, which at that time were the and dueling, which at that time were the prevailing habits and customs of the rol-licking allies in Paris. Brave as a lion, an excellent shot, and a man by no means in-clined to accept an intended slight or an insult, such as Frenchmen in those days took infinite delight in addressing to Eng-lishmen, he found himself identified, both personally and as a second, in several duels. No English officer more gallantly upheld the honor and chivalry of the British army than Captain Gronow. Some of his dueling adventures have been made use of by novelists and dramatists. Gronow, how-ever, never referred to these encounters himself, and in his "Anecdotes and Reminiscences" he has studiously avoided the narrative of many personal events which would have formed not the least attractive chapters of his gossiping miscellanies. His social career, his acquaintance with and recollection of men of the times, form perhaps the most attractive features of his richly stored mind. It is only necessary to turn to the volumes of his "Reminiscences and you find that he was identified with the most prominent statesmen, men of letters, dandies, Jew money lenders, ambassadors and celebrities of the fashionable world such as Brummell and D'Orsay. Nothing can better illustrate Captain Gronow's anti toadyism, despite his continual mingling with the highest classes, than the observaions he makes about the Prince Regent in his first volume of personal sketches and anecdotes. At page fifty-three he says:— "The Regent was singularly imbued with petty royal pride. He would rather be amiable and familiar with his tailor than agreeable and friendly with the most illustrious of the aristocracy of Great Britain; would rather joke with a Brummell than admit to his confidence a Norfolk or a Somerset. The Regent was always earti-cularly well bred in public, and showed, if he chose, decidedly good manners; but he very often preferred to address those whom he felt he could patronize. His Royal High ness was as much the victim of circum-stances and the child of thoughtless imprudence as the most humble subject of crown. His unfortunate marriage with a Princess of Brunswick originated in his debts—as he married that unhappy lady for one million sterling, Wm. Pitt being the contractor. The Princess of Wales, married nothing but an association with the crown of England. If the Prince ever seriously loved any woman, it was Mrs. Fitz-herbert, with whom he had appeared at the

Capt. Gronow was twice married, his second alliance having taken place within the last ten years. He leaves four children and a vouthful and amiable wife to lament the loss of an affectionaie father and distinguished man of the time. The immediate cause of his death was violent hemorrhage from the nose, which yielded to remedies, and was then succeeded by a fatal attack of erysipelas.

An English Girl Sold to an Indian Chie.

[From the Delhi Gazette.].

"It appears that a certain chief who holds sway in the State of Bhatwa, in the Kattywar territory, and who is named Khamal-deen, or Kumaloodeen, lately conceived a desire to add to the live stock in his harem. sire to add to the five stock in his narem. For this purpose emissaries were dispatched to Ahmedabad, where lived an Englishman with his vife and children. They were a dissolute couple, by all accounts, and of course had long rubbed akirts with poverty. They had a daughter named Anne, a girl 14 years of age, and the Bhatwa emissaries determined to make the parents an offer for their daughter. The father agreed, in consideration of 3,000 rupees, to consign his daughter for her life to the tender care of Kumaloodeen. The bargain having been struck, the contracting parties made the best of their way to Bhatwa, where the money was to be paid and the goods delivered. Arrived at their destination, this child of 14, the offspring of English parents, and a daughter of the Christian Church, was handed over to her purchaser, and the delicate-minded parents became the happy possessors of 3,000 rupees (£300). At this stage of the proceedings the chaplain of Rajoke called upon the political agent of Kattywar to rescue the child from the destruction to which, body and soul, she was docmed by her guardians. Our correspondent does not youch for the truth of the report which has reached him touching the action taken by the political agent in the matter; but what he says is, that Anne, after she had become the Newaub's property, was solemnly made to abjure the errors of a Christian Church, and formally received into communication. received into communion with the followers of the true prophet. The next step taken in regard to the child was to marry her after the Mohammedan fashion, to her purchaser, but before the ceremony was performed the po-litical officer is reported to have caused the bridegroom, just turned of seventy, to draw up a marriage settlement, by which the new light of the harem is secured in the posses-sion of an income of two thousand and odd rupees per annum, including an item of thirty supees for pan and scoparee, which may be looked upon as an equivalent for pin-money. The political agent, however, was not satisfied with this provision for the was not satisfied with this provision for the present wants of Anne. He caused another deed to be drawn up, by which it is stipulated that, in the event of her being at any time banished from the harem, she is to relaid up large stocks.

ceive, for the term of her natural life, the allowance of three thousand rupees per an-num." This affair has naturally caused great indignation among the Europeans in

Fashionable Life in India. A correspondent writing from Poonah, Western India, gives the following sketch of that ancient Mahratta capital, which is now the resort of the fashionable world of

The town is well laid out with excellent roads, heautiful groves and promenades. The dwellings, some of which are extensive, are all of the style of architecture characteristic of the bungalow of this latitude. The grounds around the houses, and generally consisting of several acres, are universally consisting of several acres, are universally laid out with great taste, and are beautified by a profusion of flowers, shrubs and trees of the climate. The most singular and at the same time attractive feature of many of the gardens are hedges of a species of cactus which puts forth a small, pale, pink blossom There is great rivalry among the resi dents here in keeping up fine gardens and adorning the exterior of the premises with everything pleasing to the eye. This exhibition of taste is not confined alone to the Europeans, but also large numbers of wealthy Parsees and Hindoos. The public buildings now being reared are spacious, and when completed will be a great improvement to the city. The water works of he ctiv are also very fine. The time for the turnout of the fashionable life of the town is between the hours of five and seven in the evening, when magni-ficent equipages with native coachmen and runners, giving the establishment a sort of princely air, are seen on the roads everywhere and in large numbers. The Parsec establishments are more noticeable than the European. The male members of the family always ride in an open vehicle in front drawn by two or four horses; following in the rear are the ladies, children and nurses of the household, according to the numbers, and in two, three or four carriages, closed so that from the outside it is mpossible on a rapid glance, to see any thing within. This is rather unaccounta ole, as the religion of the Parsees does not doom the woman to that servitude required by the peculiar views of the Turks. The effect of the presence of so much high society is obvious amongst the lower class of natives here. Poonah, for cleanliness and good appearance, cannot be excelled anvwhere.

Though the higher circles occupy social altitudes of considerable height, I find little to impress one of this fact, except in the evening drives. There is no gayety what-ever. No doubt the people come here for rest, health, cool air and sound slumbers. In this point of view they carry out this rule of life, but generally make up for the lost time during the cold season in Bombay The only prospect of excitement is in the races, which are looked for the beginning of November. As this is the time when society migrates to the city the races are a sort of winding up of the resting season, as an introduction of the gayeties about to be resumed.

CHOOSING A PHYSICIAN.—There is an Eastern story of a certain prince who had received from a fairy the faculty of not only assuming whatever appearance he though proper, but of discerning the wandering spirits of the departed. He had long la bored under a painful chronic disease, that none of the court physicians, ordinary or extraordinary, could relieve; and he re-solved to wander about the streets of his capital until he could find some one, reguor irregular, who could alleviate sufferings. For this purpose he donned the garb and appearance of a dervish. As he was passing through one of the principal streets, he was surprised to see it so thronged with ghosts that, had they been still inhabitants of their former earthly tenements, they must have obstructed the thoroughfare, But what was his amazement and dismay when he saw that they were all grouped with anxious looks round the door of his father's physician, haunting, no doubt, the man to whom they attributed their untimely doom. Shocked with the sight, he hurried to another part of the city, where resided another physician of the court holding the second rank in fashionable estima ing the second rank in fashionable estima-tion. Alas! his gateway was surrounded with the ghosts of reproachful departed pa-tients. Thunderstruck at such a discovery, and returning thanks to the Prophet that ne was still in the flesh, despite the practice of these great men, he resolved to submit all the other renowned practitioners to a similar visit: and he was grieved to find that the scale of ghosts kept pace with the scale of their medical rank. Heart-broken and despairing of a cure, he was slowly sauntering back to the palace, when, in a bscure street, and on the door of a humble dwelling, he read a doctor's name. One single poor solitary ghost, leaning his de-spondent cheek upon his fleshless hand, was seated on the doctor's steps. "Alas!" was seated on the doctor's steps. "Alas!" exclaimed the prince, "it is, then, too true that humble merit withers in the shade, while ostentatious ignorance inhabits golden mansions. This poor neglected doctor, who has but one unlarky goes to golden mansions. This poor neglected doctor, who has but one unlucky case to lament, is then the only man in whom I can place confidence. He rapped; the door was opened by the doctor himself, a venerable old man, not rich enough, perhaps, to keep a domestic to answer his unfrequent calls. His white locks and flowing beard adding to the confidence which his situation adding to the confidence which his situation had inspired. The elated youth then related at full length all his complicated ailments, and the still more complicated treatment to which he had in vain been submitted. The sapient physician was not illiberal enough to say the prince's attendants had all been in error, since all mankind may err; but his sarcas-tic smile, the curl of his lips, and the dubious shake of his hoary head, most eloquent ly told the anxious patient that he considered his former physicians as an ignorant murderous set of upstarts, only fit to depopulate a community. With a trium-phant look he promised a cure, and gave his overjoyed patient a much valued pre-scription, which he carefully confided to his bosom; after which he expressed his gratitude by pouring upon the doctor's table a purse of golden sequins, which, made the old man's blinking eyes shine as brightly as the coin he beheld in wondrous delight. His joy gave suppleness to his rigid spine, and after bowing the prince out rigid spine, and after bowing the prince out in the most obsequious manner, he ventured to ask him one humble question: "By what good luck, by what kind planet, had he been recommended to seek his advice?" The prince naturally asked for the reason of so strange a question; to which the worthy doctor replied, with eyes brimful with the tears of gratitude: "Oh, sir, because I considered myself the most up. ful with the tears of gratitude: "Oh, sir, because I considered myself the most unfortunate man in Bagdad until this happy moment; for I have been settled in this noble and wealthy city for the last fifteen years and have only been able to obtain one single patient." "Ah!" cried the prince "then it must be that poor, solitary, unhappy looking ghost that is now sitting on your steps!"

MAIL ROBBERY AT PITHOLE.-The Post office, at Pithole, we learn, from the Record, was broken into on Sunday evening, and three bags, containing the mail for New York, the Eastern and Northern States, and Eastern Pennsylvania, taken. The entrance was effected through one of the rooms in the new wing of the Chase House, in which is a window connected with the Post Office. The sum of $56,000 was in the small bags, the property of three men alone, and the full amount lost was probably between $75,000

PANY.—PHILADELPHIA, August 15th, 1855.

The Mortgage bonds of the Conneciling Railway Company, between the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad Combany in West Philadelphia and Frank ford, a distance of seven miles, can be obtained at this office, No. 228 South Third street.

These bonds are in sums of one thousand dollars, with interest coupons attached, payable at said office on the 15th day of March and September in each year, at the rate of six per centum per annum, and the principal payable in five equal annual amounts at the rate of six per centum per annum, and the raile of $200,000 per annum—the first series on September 16, A. D., 1900. The principal and interest are secured by a mortgage for one million of dollars upon all the railway and property of the company; and are guaranteed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

The railway is being constructed in the most substantial manner, and will be completed during the ensuing year. This road perfects the connection between the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York lines via Philadelphia, and becoming, as it will, the main channel of communication between New York and the West, as well as to and from the National Capital, will always obtain larger evenues and be one of the most important railways of the Union.

Under a contract with the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad Company, that company leases the road of the Company of the Company, and agrees to pay an annual rent for 999 years of six per centum upon the cost of the road, clear of taxes. These bonds are therefore recommended as a first class security.
