IN capturing about ten miles out of the city, Black and his companion, a fellow young in years, named Whelan, then in the possession of the house in Herndon, we believe, and a preconcerted signal attacked the guard, and mounting some horses, belonging to the soldiers, got off at a rapid clip. The guards immediately started in pursuit, and coming close upon Whelan, who was some distance behind Black, shot and killed him. Black again made his escape, and applied himself with more vigor than ever to plundering, stealing and robbing everybody and everything that came within his reach.

He would frequently ride into the city at night, passing through the lines at will, and as an instance of his audacity, on one occasion, rode down Adams street and fired several shots at the station houses. It was reported that he had accumulated large sums of money; and the report proved correct. As his business became either too tiresome or dangerous, he came to the city disgusted and took passage on a boat for the North. Since that time, and until recently, nothing has been heard from him. It seems that he left Memphis to go to St. Paul, Minnesota, and embarked in the lumber and saloon business under his proper name, John Keen. His restless spirit could not stand the monotony of such a dull business to him, and he returned to the territories, where, through his depredations and murders he became quickly known, and soon reached the seat of the vigilance committee at Idaho City. Black entered that place by himself, and being unknown in person, imagined himself perfectly safe.

He was, however, a treacherous spirit exhibited itself; for, scarcely had he been there twenty-four hours before he was involved in a quarrel with a miner, whom he deliberately struck on the forehead with a hammer, and with but a little warning as he was about to grant his own victims, was ushered into that dreadful eternity, where the departed soul of John Keen, alias "Bob Black," is supposed to be wandering in agony.

Accident on the Hudson and Boston Railroad.—On the 18th inst., as the passenger train on the Hudson and Boston Railroad, which left Hudson at 2:45 P. M. on that day, reached Blue Hill, one mile east of Chatham, it was killed, and several others severely injured. At the time the accident occurred the train was crossing an embankment about 200 feet high, and the engine was about 100 feet on the other side of the track. The rear passenger car of the train, from some unknown cause, became detached and was thrown from the track about 35 feet onto the bank. The baggage-master was at the brakes at the time the car went over. Among those severely injured were Wm. Russell, road-master; Mr. Flint, conductor; Mr. J. R. Tice, and several other persons. Mr. Russell, of Hudson, held an inquest on the body of Blinn on Tuesday, the jury rendering a verdict in accordance with the above facts.—N. Y. Times.

SECRETARY WELLES has ordered that the rebel pirate Capt. Semmes be tried by Court-martial, for violating the laws of war in a number of instances, and more especially for hoisting the white flag on the Alabama, and then refusing to surrender himself, and engaged in war again without being exchanged. Semmes claims the protection of the parole granted by General Sherman to the forces under Johnston, one of whom was this said Semmes.

IN the case of the Mrs. Eugene Landon, tried in Buffalo for the murder of Mrs. Crook by administering poison, the jury on Saturday reported a disagreement, and were discharged.
