And poured out their blood in defence of our laws; To the army and navy, who fought without fear, We proffer a peace and a Happy New Year To the men of the anvil, the loom, and the plow, And all others who live by the "sweat of their brow To the "sinew and bone" of our nation so We eagerly proffer a Happy New Year. For the millions who moan in the grasp of disease, Whose anguish all efforts has failed to appease; For the many who long for relief in the bier— We pray for good health and a Happy New Year. To the ragged and famished who plead at the door, And weeping, perhaps, over pleasures of yore—
To the poor, weary beggars, with hope in the sear,
We tender our aid and a Happy New Year. To the multitude coming from near and afar, To purchase their clothes at the glorious STAR; To the many preferring a suit that is cheap, As well as most durable, stylish and neat; To the masses who come with the noble intent Of saving from fifteen to twenty per cent; To our patrons, who come from afar off and near We tender our stock and a Happy New Year. MONDAY, JANUARY 1, 1866.

THE KETTRING MAYOR. At noon to-day Alexander Henry ceased to be Mayor of Philadelphia, and Morton McMichael succeeded to the place so long and so honorably filled by the gentleman first named. Mr. Henry held the office of Mayor for nearly eight years, having been elected in May, 1858. We hazard nothing in saying that he was in office during the most momentous period in the history of the city, and that no Mayor ever retired from place after having filled it more acceptably to the community than Alexander Henry. Philadelphia has been favored with many good Mayors, with not a few who were either poor or indifferent, and with some who were perhaps absolutely bad. Robert Wharton, who served for several terms at different pe_ riods, was remarkable for his inflexible sternness and for his strict integrity in the performance of his duty. John Swift was brave as a lion and by his personal courage put down several threatening riots. Charles Gilpin was singularly prompt in his attentention to business. Isaac Roaca, John M. Scott, Peter McCall and Joel Jones were accomplished gentlemen and excellent citizens, and Robert T. Conrad was a brilliant orator. But until the coming into office of the last named gentleman, the mayoralty of Philadelphia was a very different matter from what it was during the term of service of Mr. Henry. Prior to 1854 the Mayor had no authority outside the narrow bounds of the old City proper. Within his own restricted bailiwick he was scarcely more than a chief of police and a committing magistrate, having but few duties to perform save the hearing of police cases and the appointment of policemen. He sent no regular messages to Councils and exercised no contro! over their legislation. The Act of Consolidation changed all this; the Mayor became the executive head of a great consolidated municipality, and onerous responsibilities were placed upon his shoulders. Mr. Henry brought to this work thorough capacity, firmness and courage equal to Wharton or Swift; an integrity that has never been questioned by his bitterest political opponents, a courtesy equal to that of Dallas or Scott and in, oratory scarcely less ready and graceful than the accomplished Conrad. Mr. Henry came into office at a most difficult period. He followed upon the heels of the disgraceful administration of Mr. Vaux, and he found a wretchedly demoralized police system to demand his first attention. The great financial crash of 1857 had unsettled the prosperity of the city; the times were gloomy and the city government was almost anarchic. Soon after this commenced the political troubles which resulted in secession and civil war, and all who have lived in Philadelphia during the last five momentous years will remember how often it was needful that a clear head, a patriotic heart, a wise purpose and a firm hand should be at the head of the city government. These qualities were all possessed by Mayor Henry, and while Baltimore was only rescued from the hands of a secession mob by force of arms, and while New York was devastated by the most terrible riots on record, the peace of Philadelphia was preserved almost intact during all the trials the city and country

Henry this circumstance is to be attributed. If Mayor Henry had a fault in his official character it was what many persons considered an extreme conservatism, a cautiousness that refused to follow when popular feeling would have him lead. This conservatisms came of habitual prudence, and while it may have occasionally disappointed the popular expectation, sober second thought generally justified the conduct of the Mayor, This conservatism often restrained rash legislation in City councils, and prevented the carrying out of mischievous or illegal measures. Mr. Henry was emphatically a model Mayor, and it will only be the most carping among his political opponents who will refuse to join in the general verdict "Well done thou good and faithful ser-

JAMAICA. The temporary removal of Governor Eyre and the appointment of Sir Henry K Storks as a sort of Provisional Governor of Jamaica, is the first step towards a formal investigation of the insurrection in that island. The profoundest sensation has been produced in England, first by the terrible uprising of the blacks, with its scenes of savage cruelty and slaughter, and then by the more terrible vengeance dealt out by the authorities upon the offenders. The English papers are crowded with discussions of the merits of the case, to an extent that has rarely been elicited by any subject of public interest. Governor Eyre's course is stoutly defended and as stoutly assailed on all sides. Looking on from a dispassionate position, the main points that present themselves to our view are these. The insurrection was crushed; out, as it should have been, with a prompt, stern force which evidently struck terror into the hearts of the inflamed and maddened conspirators. Governor Eyre states that in a single week the rebellion was crushed. No sensible mind will question the propriety, dictated by the most ordinary instincts of self-preservation, of this instant suppression of a most alarming rising of a mass of ignorant and misguided people. It is with the afterpiece, that the British nation feels that it has to do. For weeks after the rebellion was avowedly at an end, the work of shooting, flogging and hanging went on, until thousands of these miserable people had perished, in expiation for the few murders which had been committed at Morant Bay. The whole proceedings of the military authorities of Jamaica can only be explained upon the theory that they were mad with fear. It seems to be a peculiarity of the British character to become most savagely brutal under such circumstances, and the illustration of this feature just given in Jamaica is only a repetition, on a large scale, of the cruelties which made the British name so odious in the India Rebellion. When we bear in mind the fact that not a single soldier was killed in Jamaica, and that after the first attack upon the Court House at Morant Bay; only two whites were killed by the rioters, we cannot resist the conclusion that the wholesale executions which followed were little better than a massacre in cold blood. The Times claims credit for the authorities for having given Mr. Gordon a most fair and deliberate trial, because the trial 'lasted from two o'clock in the day until after dark," or about five or six hours. Not a very long time to keep a man on trial for his life, and in strange contrast with the patient and thorough examination given to the few criminals who have been convicted before American

Courts Martial. Whatever be the result of the official investigations, we cannot imagine any development of facts which can change the essential features of the case; and although it is more than probable that the high personal character of Governor Eyre and his hitherto unimpeached conduct in the discharge of his various official duties will exercise a powerful influence in his behalf, the Jamaica massacre will remain as a black page in British history. It is not the least singular feature of this affair that it comesso immediately upon the close of our own rebellion, and is in such striking contrast with it. In the one case the world is amazed with the generous leniency with which our Government has dealt with the worst of the subjugated rebels. In the other, the world shudders at the vengeance which could not be stayed or satisfied until it had literally "slain its thousands."

THE STATE LEGISLATURE. To-morrow is the day, fixed for the meeting of the Legislature of Pennsylvania. When Governor Curtin found himself compelled, by ill health, to make a visit to Cuba, he left a brief message to be presented at the opening of the session, but it does not pretend to discuss the affairs of the State generally. The regular message will be sent in on the Governor's return, which, it is understood, will be in the course of a fortnight. It is believed that the Legislature, scon after organizing, will adjourn to meet again on the return of the executive.

THE OPERA.—There is every prospect of a large and fashionable audience at the Academy of Music this evening, when the Italian Opera company are to play Gounod's Faust. The cast is superior to any we have ever had here. To-morrow will be played L'Africaine, of Meyerbeer, which has created such an extraordinary sensation in Paris London, Berlin, New York and wherever it has been produced.

Hon. HENRY WINTER DAVIS, of Maryland, died at his residence in Baltimore, on Friday night, of pneumonia. As one of the ablest and most loyal of the statesmen of the South, Mr. Davis had endeared himself to the friends of the Union. A long tribute to his memory, from a personal friend, is in type, but is unfortunately crowded out of to-day's paper.

THE LIST OF TAXABLES who have neglected to pay the City and State taxes will be found on our inside pages.

JORDAN'S ICELEBRATED TONIC ALE—The truly healthful and nutritious beverage, now in use by thousands—invalids and others—has established a character, for quality of material and purity of man-facture, which stands unrivaled. It is recommended by physicians of this and other places, as a superior-tonic and requires but a trial to convince the most skeptical of its great merit. To be had, wholesale and setall, of P. I. JORDAN, 228 Pear street.
