

SECOND EDITION.

BY TELEGRAPH.

INTERESTING FROM WASHINGTON.

The Committee on Reconstruction.

Probable Admission of the Tennessee Delegation.

OUR RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

FIRE IN LOUISVILLE.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—The Committee on Reconstruction were in session to-day. The admission of the Tennessee delegation is the first matter under consideration.

A majority of the committee are opposed to making Tennessee an exception. Nevertheless such exception will be made, as it is known to be the President's wish.

Secretary McCulloch will transmit his financial message to the Senate and House Finance Committees in the beginning of next week.

The Senate committee on Foreign Affairs will probably report adversely to Mr. Campbell's appointment as Minister to Mexico.

Col. J. Browning, the Secretary of Legation, will not be confirmed.

Despatches from Gen. Sheridan represent matters quiet along the Rio Grande.

From Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 6.—About one o'clock this morning a fire broke out in a photographic studio, over the New Albany and Chicago Railroad office, threatening a deluge of the latter establishment by water.

Sailing of the Britannia.

NEW YORK, Jan. 6th, 1886.—The iron screw steamer Britannia, of the Anchor Line, sailed to-day for Glasgow, carrying passengers to Londonderry, Belfast, Dublin, Newry, Cork and Liverpool.

The steamship Caledonia will be the succeeding vessel. She will leave for the above ports on Saturday next the 13th inst.

LATER NEWS FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the Moravian.

PROGRESS OF THE FENIAN TRIALS.

Convictions and Severe Sentences.

FATAL COAL MINE EXPLOSION.

American Securities.

LARGE AMOUNTS GOING ABOARD.

Commercial Intelligence.

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 6.—The steamship Moravian has arrived here with Liverpool dates of December 21, via Londonderry on December 22. The Kangaroo arrived on December 20, the Allemania December 20, the North America, City of Manchester and Pennsylvania on December 21.

The Moravian brings no political news of importance.

The Fenian trials and convictions continue at Cork. McCafferty is the only man thus far acquitted.

Samuel Dolevan and Thomas Duggan, were sentenced respectively to five and ten years penal servitude.

The trial of Charles Underwood O'Connell was progressing, and evidence was given connecting him with the head centre in New York.

Another coal mine explosion had occurred near Merthyr Tydfil in Wales, killing thirty-two persons and injuring many others.

The ship Yvca from Hull for Charleston, shores near Blakeney got off after throwing a part of her cargo overboard. She has six feet of water in her hold and is much strained.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—The Times says that the statement from New York, that the Chilean Envoy thought fit to give a banquet to the representatives of the Anarchal Mexican Republic, has not tended, in the city of London, to increase the sympathy entertained for the Chileans in their dispute with Spain.

The Times says the present contest in the Colony of Victoria, if carried much farther, must inevitably assume the form of a conflict between the Assembly and the Northern county.

The cattle disease returns for the week ending December 18th are more favorable.

The Times city article says: A purchase of £300,000 consols for the Court of Chancery, coupled with the circumstance of the Bank not having adopted any advance in the rate of discount, caused the English funds to be steady yesterday morning at the rise of 1/2, but the improvement was not maintained.

Between this date and the 14th of January the market will be liable to be influenced occasionally by arrangements in connection with the large amount of securities to be deposited with the Court of Chancery on account of new railway bills.

At the Bank yesterday the discount demand was light and in the Stock exchange advances were freely offered at 60 per cent.

The agitation in the repeal of the malt duty has recommenced.

Satterthwaite's circular of Dec. 20th, says: "Since our last a very large amount of business has been transacted, and we have received at considerably enhanced quotations. The message of President Johnson giving renewed confidence, the final quotation was 68 1/2."

Sergeant Emmanuel Dickinson, of the Fourteenth District, who lives but a short distance off, was notified, and proceeded at once to the spot. An examination of the body was then made. Over the right eye of the deceased was a large bruise. This was sufficient to have rendered the old lady insensible.

The assassin was not satisfied, however. With some very sharp instrument he had inflicted a horrible and deep gash in the throat of Miss Watt. The cut was a clean one, and reached to the ear.

There was nothing in the appearance of the room to indicate that the old lady had made a struggle for her life. The blow upon the head had evidently done the work of the murderer.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

the room to indicate that the old lady had made a struggle for her life. The blow upon the head had evidently done the work of the murderer.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

the room to indicate that the old lady had made a struggle for her life. The blow upon the head had evidently done the work of the murderer.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

The man who lives in the neighborhood and passed the house a few moments before seven o'clock, states that he observed a man standing on the porch talking to some person who he does not remember. He could not give a satisfactory description of the man, however.

The intelligence of the murders spread in the neighborhood, and created quite an excitement in the neighborhood. The house was taken possession of by the police and no person was allowed to enter.

Plunder appears to have been the motive for the commission of the atrocious deed. Some of the bureau drawers in the second story room were found open, and papers of various kinds were scattered about.

Some of the boxes in which the papers had been kept were also found.

It is not known whether the robber and murderer secured anything. Miss Lippincott does not know whether Miss Watt had any money in the house. As she kept a blank account, the presumption is that there was very little if any funds there.

The murderer left nothing behind by which a clue to his identity could be established. Even the window through which the crime was committed was taken away. From certain tracks in the back yard and in an adjoining lot, it is supposed that the fiend escaped that way.

WINDOW SHADES.

Window Shades--Holland.

Window Shades--Gilt.

Window Shades--Painted.

Window Shades--Flain.

In Every Desirable Color, Style or Price.

LACE CURTAINS

Parlor Curtains,

Drawing Room Curtains,

Library Curtains,

Dining-Room Curtains,

Sleeping-Room Curtains,

Piano and Table Covers

IN ENTIRELY NEW DESIGNS.

L. E. WALRAVEN,

MASONIC HALL,

719 Chestnut Street.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK,

Philadelphia, Sept. 30, 1865

TIME DEPOSITS ON INTEREST.

INTEREST AT THE RATE OF FOUR PER CENT. PER ANNUM WILL NOT BE ALLOWED UNLESS THE DEPOSIT REMAINS AT LEAST FIFTEEN DAYS.

C. H. CLARK, President.

DREXEL & CO.,

BANKERS,

5-20's,

7-30's,

10-40's,

1881's,

Certificates of Indebtedness,

Compound Interest Notes of 1864, and GOLD AND SILVER.

Bought and Sold.

Drugs drawn on England, Ireland, France and Germany.

Real Estate Valued.

Expenses.

Taxes.

Capital Stock.

Circulating Notes.

Due to Banks and Bankers.

Due to Treasurer of the United States.

Due to Individual Depositors.

Dividends Unpaid.

Surplus Fund.

Profit and Loss.

LIABILITIES.

Capital Stock.

Surplus Fund.

Due to Banks and Bankers.

Due to Treasurer of the United States.

Due to Individual Depositors.