MURDERS AND JURIES.

Although we were in possession of the principal particulars of the Germantown murder some days since, we costly war. It is a question whether refrained from making them public war should be resorted to in the matter until very recently, in deference to the views and wishes of the legal authorities. of polygamy. The question of the right and we only published them finally to coerce a territory was settled when the right was established to coerce States when they were gradually leaking out that defied the national authority. But in a mutilated shape and doing all the it is not clear that the suppression of the damage they could do if the authorities were correct in their views, and doing no manner of good in the way of enlightening the public or in serving the cause of justice.

We can easily understand that crimes may and frequently do occur where the general circulation of information may cripple the operations of detectives in without extraordinary cost, take some "working up" their cases, and in all such events we have scrupulously steps in this direction during the present avoided making any mention of parsession of Congress. ticulars that would operate to the detriment of justice. As we understand the matter, the objection urged against the publication of the particulars of this recent horror at Germantown and the circumstances that seem to bear upon Berger, the alleged murderer, is that it would be impossible to obtain a comtion of the moral law of all civilized petent jury to try the accused. We nations. Fill all the government offices admit that these reasons would have considerable force were the old rule observed of excluding from the jury-box every citizen who had "formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner." The effect of this practice was to exclude every intelligent juror and to confide the duty not Mormons, by liberal offers of land. In that way a population would be in of deciding the question of life and death to men who were either too ignorant to be familiar with matters of public notoriety, too stupid to reason to an intelligent conclusion from the facts before them, or too deficient in conscientiousness to care whether they answered truthfully or falsely when questioned as to their qualification as jurors.

to their qualification as jurors. If we mistake not, it was in the trial of Arthur Spring that a different and a much more intelligent rule was es-tablished. The circumstances of the murder were so widely spread abroad, and the guilt of the accused was so mani-fest, that the court would have had to either summon a jury of American mode more of which had not only formed but had expressed an opinion. The necessities of the case brought about a remedy, and this remedy con-sisted in the propounding of an im-portant query or two in addition to the old stereotyped questions. The new If we mistake not, it was in the trial
