A HOUSE OF CORRECTION WANTED.

The following brief narrative exhibits with painful eloquence, the condition of men. women and children who live, or rather stay, in the haunts of vice, wretch-edness, misery and ruin in Bedford, Spaf-ford, Baker and other streets in different sections of our city. There are many just such places as are described in the follow-ing. Years since there were even worse ing. scenes in these streets than those which are herewith presented. Long ago, the BUL-LETIN came to the conclusion that a wellorganized house of correction, such as they have in Boston and other Eastern citie would be among the most valuable instrueffect reform and afford per mentalities to manent relief to the poor wretches who haunt the infected districts of the city. With a view to giving the public an insight to the real condition of things, so as to bring about the reform we advocated, a reporter of the BULLETIN carefully explored the entire distance as far back as January 1853. His description of the terrible scenes he wit-nessed (which afterwards was published in pamphlet form,) created a profound sensa-tion and the project of establishing a House of Correction was at once moted. There were various bills passed by the

of the sorrow and suffering we with thing like an adequate idea of , the legislature looking to the giving State practical effect to this project; but a House of Correction thus far exists upon paper only, while vice and misery continue to fleurish. Until the establishment of such Until the establishment of such an institution philanthropists will find plenty to do, and their work will increase heavily on their hands, and finally they will grow sick and weary of the task. The streets named are simple the vestibules of streets named are simple the vestibiles of perdition—one step more and the poor miserable wretches, reeking with all their moral deformity, pitch headlong into the bottomless pit of eternity. The vast majority of the people of Philadelphia would stand appalled upon visiting the dark, damp, cold subterranean dens, where chivaging emergisted creatures are perishshivering, emaciated creatures are perish ing by inches. Read the narrative, as re ported by a gentleman, who made a visit in company with a committee, of which four were ladies: A few evenings since at half-past seven o'clock, accompanied by Mr. Siegfried, the superintendent, Miss Mellen, the physician, and three lady missionaries connected with ye did it not!" Go, see for yourselves. A visit will more than verify all we have Home for Little Wanderers, No. 820 South street, we started upon a tour of oh servation and relief through Bedford, Spafford and Baker streets, commencing in Bedford, near Seventh. Our equipments consisted of two large bags and several baskets of bread, a box of matches, a couple of tallow candles, and a steady determination to see what was to be seen, and relieve tion to see what was to be seen, and relieve what we could of the misery we were certain to meet at avery point of the route we had laid down. Entering Bedford at Seventh street, we knocked at a closed celiar door. There was no response. Shoving open the door and lighting a candle, we descended and boards, covered with a piece of ragged carpeting. Perhaps he was drunk; at all events we failed to wake him. We left_a loaf of peting. bread in his hand and departed. In the adjoining cellar, after a few vigorous raps, we succeeded in gaining admission, but only to witness a scene of s cellar was about eight by twelve feet, with earthen floor, and occupied by three fami-lies. The first was that of a sailor, who had seen twenty-three years' service under the flag of his country. For three weeks this poor man had been in that wretched cellar, in a filthy bunk. His only covering consisted of a piece of ragged carpeting. Behind him and against the cold stone wall lay a pretty little girl, whose thin features gave tokens of pinching want. The wife and mother leaned sadly upon the bunk. This family were without food; we gave them bread. In the adjoining bunk was another sick man, while a pale-faced woman sat a wretched tallow-candle. Where the third family slept, God only knows, as there was scarcely standing room beside the bunks. Emerging from this second den of misery we found the street literally crowded with women and children. The unusual number. appearance and equipments of our party had created a sensation. It was rumored around that we were dispensing bread, and in five minutes we were surrounded by an eager crowd of famishing women and children. Mothers, half-clad and shivering with cold, pleaded for a loaf for their perishing little ones; children,bare-footed and bare-headed, crowded around and patiently waited in the icy street for the little pittance we were able give them. Our supply was soon exhausted, while the crowd of hungry human beings had augmented. We divided loaves, and finally were compelled to return to the Home for more bread. Cutting the loaves into pieces before we started, we procured a lantern and again, bag on back, sought Bedford street. In the meantime the ladies had effected an entrance into another cellar, in the far corner trance into another cellar, in the far corner of which, with her head propped against the stone wall by a bundle of old rags, her wasted body resting upon a few rags on the bare ground, lay a dying woman. Sad and sorrowful as was this scene, there was a burder in the company of the residuation beauty in the calmness and resignation with which this poor creature bore her sorrows. The Rev. Mr. Siegiried, and mose with him, knelt in prayer, and as the voice of petition to God reached the clamorous The Rev. Mr. Siegfried, and those crowd on the pavement, one by one their voices were hushed, and there, on that cold winter's night, with ice under foot and hilling foot chilling frost above, barefooted, almost naked and perishing for food, that wretched crowd listened to the prayer which was being said for the dying woman; and when the petition ceased and the ladies sang a sweet little hymn to the words-"We shall walk through the valley in peace," all was as quiet and hushed outside, as though the listeners above were seated in crimsoned pews, beneath vaulted roofs. We have heard the great and eloquent pleading have heard the great and eloquent pleading with the Father for the poor and perishing; we have listened to music from the great masters, performed by our finest artists, but never has our heart been touched as by that earnest, heartfelt prayer, and that beautiful little hymn going up to Him who hears and sees all from that abode of wretchedness and poverty. Reaching the street again, we commenced anew to distribute the bread we carried with us, continuing the work until our supplies and ourselves were both exhausted. In the three streets named, we visited some thirty cellars, garrets, and sheds, in which probably, sixty families, numbering from two to six persons each, were found. It will scarcely be credited when we state that with one exception we did not find a single bed fit for a human being to lie down upon, and not more than five that had even the slightest claim to the name of bed. A few rags, the hard floor, or the cold ground, formed the resting places of nine-tenths of the mothers, fathers, and children whom we saw. In one house we found a woman slok unto death. A physician was sent for. He came, and without existing
