GREAT BRITAIN. The London Times refers to the satisfactory aspect of European affairs, and trusts that the prospect of a lasting peace will have some effect on the military administration of European powers, and that there will be some alteration of those burdens which everywhere weigh so heavily.

The Times anticipates that by next January the Emperor Napoleon will have withdrawn the French troops from Mexico, as well as from Rome.

The Army and Navy Gazette referring to its announcement last week of the reductions in the army, says:—"At present, what is actually decided upon is that each battais actuary decided upon is that each patta-lion in the United Kingdom shall be reduced from twelve toten companies, and regiments abroad will be reduced in like manner of their leturn home." Meir return home."

Mr. Bright's reform speech at Rochdale is universally regarded by the press as a modification of his reform demands, and as indicating that he is prepared to accept such moderate measures as the Cabinet may be expected to propose. His political enemies credit him with being far less offensive than in any of his previous speeches.

SPAIN.

Two incomplete regiments of cavalry stationed at Aranguez and Ocana, revolted on the 4th inst. Three of the superior, and a majority of the inferior officers took no part in the movement. General Zavala, Minister of Marine, immediately set out from Madrid with a strong column in pursuit of the insurgents, who are reported to be instigated by General Prim. They were retreating hastily towards the mountains of Canenca. The movement has no importance, and finds no support among the people.

Madrid and the provinces remained tran-quil, but it is reported that the troops are confined to the barracks at Madrid.

The latest despatches assert that Generals Prim, Carlos and Latorre are at the head of the insurgents; that the movement was organized by the progressionists, and that the cry of the insurgents was "Viva Espar-

After leaving Ocana, it is said the insurgents destroyed the bridges over the Tagus, to delay the pursuit of Zavala, who, at the time, was almost within reach of them, being only one hour's march in the rear. Madrid was perfectly tranquil, but re-ports were current that martial law would be proclaimed there.

XXXIXth CONGRESS_FIRST SESSION. WASHINGTON, Jan. 20, 1866. SENATE.—A joint resolution extending the time for the completion of the Burlington and Missouri Railroad was passed.

Mr. Lane (Ind.) called up the bill authorizing the President, instead of the Secretary of the Interleave to president.

of the Interior, to appoint pension agents, and name the boundaries of the pension districts. Mr. Lane (Kansas) was opposed to the bill, believing that there is no necessity for passing it, because the national banks would distribute pension money for the use of the deposits. He asked for time to allow him to bring in a substitute with this provision.

The bill was read three times and passed without amendment.
On motion of Mr. Fessenden (Me.), the House bill, making appropriations for invalid and other pensions, for the year ending June, 1867, was taken up and passed.

Mr. Stewart (Nevada) asked leave to call up the bill for the admission of Colorado as a State in the Union.

Mr. Sumner (Mass.) hoped this would not be done, as he had an amendment to offer.

Mr. Stewart gave notice that he would call up the bill on Wednesday next.

Mr. Cowan (Pa.) moved to amend by restricting the operations of the Bureau to the States lately in rebellion.

Mr. Trumbull said this would have the mr. Trumbull said this would have the effect of excluding Kentucky, Missouri, Delaware and Maryland, where there were many emancipated slaves who needed the protectian of the Bureau.

Mr. Guthrie (Ky.) said there was no reason why Kentucky should be included in the bill, as she did not want the relief proposed. The freedman ware a part of her posed. The freedmen were a part of her population and would be cared for as such. He believed the States themselves could He believed the States themselves could take care of the freedmen much better than the Freedmen's Bureau. The bill before the Senate was providing for a lazzaroni throughout the Southern States, and Kentucky wanted no such thing within her borders. The bill before the Senate could not be intended as a matter of economy, and if economy was the object, it could better have been accomplished by the immediate admission of the Southern States. He did not understand what the gentleman meant when he said the war was not over There had been no hostile forces in the field for nine months, and in May last the President issued an amnesty proclamation, looking to peace and Union. This had been looked upon as too lenient to the South, but he was sorry the President had not gone further. As it was there were about 35,000 exceptions to the proclamation, and among these all the misfortunes of the war would be distributed. The South has lost ten thousand millions of dollars worth of proceeds by the way and be thought they do perty by the war, and he thought they deserved it as the consequence of bringing on the war; but was this not punishment enough? In conclusion he said it was not in the laws of the Union that Congress should send officers of the Freedmen's should send officers of the Freedmen's Bureau to regulate the relations between citizens and freedmen in Kentucky. He was sorry to see the spirit manifested toward the Southern people in Congress, for he believed these people were sincere in their professions of willingness and anxiety to return to the Union.

Mr. Pomeroy (Kansas) was glad to hear from Mr. Guthrie an admission that the constitutional amendment rendered null and void all slave codes and laws relating and void all slave codes and laws relating to slavery.

Mr. Guthrie said that was his opinion and that of a very able lawyer of Lexington, from whom he had received a letter on the subject.

Mr. Pomeroy continued his remarks, stating that he would do nothing to the Southern States for revenge, but only for security in the future. Pending the discussion, the Senate ad-

Mass Meeting of the Friends of Irish Nationality. A mass meeting, called by the Fenian Brotherhood, was held on Saturday even-ing, at the Sansom street Hall. It was largely attended, the Hall being crowded in largely attended, the Hall being crowded to every part. Seats near the platform were occupied by ladies, a number being present.

The meeting was organized by the selection of Mr. Benjamin Baker for President. Upon taking the chair he made a few remarks, and concluded by introducing to the audience Mr. J. J. Rogers, of New York, who was received with loud applause. He said that if he understood the object of the meeting it was to express sympathy with meeting, it was to express sympathy with the movements for Irish Independence, a movement which had gone on step by step until it had assumed most colossal proportions which had grown from the mystic number of twelve until it could be counted by hundreds of thousands, and which is now a most formidable organization. Unhappy differences had arisen among its members, attributable perhaps to the ambition or the avarice of selfish men who had wished to turn it to their own account, but those differences should not be permitted to interfere with the great work in hand—the liberation of Ireland from the heel of the oppressor. [Applause.] He then referred to the difficulties more particularly, and defended the action of the Fenian Brotherhood in the course that had been pursued towards

Mr. Roberts and those who had acted with him. Before their dismissal every attempt had been made to harmonize matters, but without effect. Mr. Roberts refused to allow the four hundred representatives to examine into his affairs, and treated them as if he were entirely independent of their action. As the malcontents had been driven from the ranks, and there was no obstacle in the way of success, he could call upon Irishmen to give the movement their united; and hearty aid. A wealthy gentlemen of Penn-sylvania had offered to furnish a privateer s soon as the first blow is struck, but why not give it before? Why wait until the first blow is struck. There should be no delay in the matter. Every man, and woman too, who has, a heart to feel for the oppressed and persecuted of Ireland should be ready to subscribe for the bonds of the Irish Republic. They could not show their confidence in the success of the movement ner aid it more materially than by sub scribing liberally. "Will you not do it?" he said. He was answered by loud cries "Yes we will," from all parts of the hall. Who could doubt the integrity and sincerity of Colonel John O'Mahony, after his endorse-ment by the Convention? Had it not shown its confidence in him by appointing him its inancial agent? and had not the liberated Innancial agents and had not the liberated James Stephens given his opinion of Col. O'Mahony by appointing him Financial Agent of the Irish Republic in America? At the mention of the name of James Stephens At the Mention of the name of James Stephens, there was great cheering, which lasted for several minutes. Mr. Rogers was interrupted twice during his remarks by an elderly gentleman among the audience, who by his questions showed himself to be a friend to the deposed Mr. Roberts. audience would not, however, tolerate his interruptions, and had he gone on he would no doubt have been ejected from the hall, as there were loud cries of "Turn him out!"

each time. Mr. Rogers was followed by Mr. Jere-mish Cavin, of California, who spoke of a recent visit to Ireland, and said that he had seen enough to satisfy him of the readiess of Irishmen at home to strike for their

He deplored the recent difficulties in the Brotherhood, but said that they could not do more than temporarily interfere with the great work to be accomplished. No power could stay its progress effectually. It must go on, and be crowned with triumphs in the end, but in order to succeed it was necessary for the Irish people in America to subscribe liberally to the Irish bonds. War could not be carried on without means, as was shown by the immense debt which the United States had incurred in the late civil strife. The speader was of the opinion, that with abundant means the independence of Ire-land would be of easy accomplishment, One hundred and fifty thousand muskets in One hundred and fitty thousand muskets in the hands of Irishmen could do it. [Applause.] Mr. Cavin closed by a strong appeal to the ladies of America to aid the cause. He need only point them to the work that had been accomplished by the ladies of the Sanitary Commission, and the good that had been done by the Sisters of Charity. It wanted but the will to do, and they would themselves be astonished at the The third and last speaker was Mr. D. B. The third and last speaker was Mr. D. B. Killian, of New York, whose appearance was the signal for a genuine outburst of enthusiasm, the applause lasting several minutes. He was introduced as the friend and defender of Col. John O'Mahony, and the manner in which the announcement was received showed the feeling of the assemblers.

It was impossible, he said after referring to the object of the meeting—for him to Mr. Trombull (III.) called up the bill to understand how any man of Irish birth or parentage, or, indeed, any lover of liberty, could be anything else than a Fenian. [Applause.] The cause of Trishmen is the cause of every man in whose bosom the spirit of freedom burns, no matter where his birthplace or where his home.

He thought that the Government of the United States could not better carryout the spirit of its founders, and the principles upon which it is based, than to show its sympathy for oppressed nationalities every-sympathy for oppressed nationalities everywhere, and especially for persecuted Ireland. [Great applause.] The speaker proceeded to argue that the United States suffered much for the want of a distinctive foreign policy, one in accordance with its republican principles, and thought that it could not do better than embrace the cause of Fenianism. Ireland, he said, is a splendid country.

It contains a fighting force of over two millions, and could support a war of ten years' duration. There is no finer climate in the world, and its possession by the United States would be of incalculable benefit in a commercial point of view. The speaker rejoiced that Ireland was about to do something for herself, and he did not doubt the issue of the conflict. Money was doubt the issue of the conflict. Money was only needed, he said, to secure the speedy accomplishment of Irish independence, and he closed by an urgent appeal to all whese hearts were in the work to subscribe liberally to the Irish bonds. The meeting then djourned.
