[From the New York Lancet.] Colds are generally considered but simple things, and, as a natural conse-quence, are too much neglected. How often do you hear the remark, "Oh, it is only a cold!" True, only a cold; but what is being done for it? Frequently nothing. Many a long and dangerous, and sometimes fatal, fit of illness might and sometimes fatal, it of illness hight be prevented by paying that proper at-tention to a cold which it so seriously demands. Most of the causes of con-sumption come from cold being in the first instance neglected. To many other diseases does it also give rise. In a climate like this, where we have sometimes two and three changes in a day, it is impossible to avoid taking cold, unless due precaution be observed. Persons should clothe themselves as much as possible in keeping with the temperature of the at-

with the thermometer above zero, clothing should not be so warm as at or below zero, as by so doing the pores are opened to an undue extent, sometimes profuse perspiration induced, and as a consequence, cold is taken. Draft, in every way, whether in or out of doors, ought to be avoided. Too much importance cannot be given to this, but yet we see it daily neglected. How often do we see persons in this city, on one of the bleakest days, stopping to talk at the corner of the street in a draft of wind. This, too, is generally the case after walking fast and becoming heated. How is it possible, under such circumstances, to avoid taking cold? And yet persons will so inno-cently tell you, "I don't know how I could have taken cold. I have not exposed myself in any way."

As important, also, is the mode of life indoors, for on this much depends.

Ladies are very apt to dress for going out, and then sit in a warm room for half an hour perhaps more, if something delays them, by which perspiration is produced, and in that state, from the warm house into the cool air they go. It must be remembered that to the corresponding temperature of the atmosphere do the pores close or open; a uniform temperature should be observed, as by so doing the circulation is regularly maintained. Any one leaving an atmosphere of eighty degrees, and going to one of sixty degrees, experiences a great change, and if they wish to avoid cold, should be clad in such a manner as to make up for the propor-tionate difference in the temperature. For this reason great uniformity in the temperature of the house should be observed. Change the atmosphere in the house frequently by admitting, as often as possible, during the day, fresh air.

Every house should be thoroughly ventilated the first thing every morning, so as to allow the atmosphere of the previous night to escape. This can be done by first airing one part and then another. By doing this a house also can be more easily warmed. When can be more easily warmed. When there are many persons collected in a room, care should be observed to keep a few inches of the window open from the top, every one avoiding sitting close to or under it, as, after a time, when there are many collected together, the atmosphere of the room becomes impregnated with their exhalations, and the air is thus rendered impure. By perfect ventilation there is a uniform amount of oxygen, which is the vital part of the oxygen, which is the vital part of the atmosphere, and which is necessary to our very existence, maintained. Who has not noticed the disagreeable feeling produced on going from the fresh air into a room with many persons, in which the ventilation is imperfect? At night, also, fresh air should be admitted into the room, for it is, if anything, more necessary that there should be a plentiful supply of oxygen. We have often been asked the ridiculous question, if enough air did not come in through the key-hole. Certainly not. That is not fresh air. Make it a rule always to sleep with part of your window open from the top, avoiding its blowing on you. Fresh air never hurt any one, for by it we live. It is the want of it that injures. Persons seem to forget that they spend one-third of their lives in their bed-rooms. We frequently see a man building a house bestowing all his attention on the plan of the parlors always to sleep with part of your window attention on the plan of the parlors, while the bed-rooms are, to a great extent, and in some instances entirely neglected. It had better be vice versa. Another thing to which we wish to draw attention is that of neglecting to draw attention is that of neglecting to change shoes and stockings after being out on a damp or rainy day. Though they may neither appear nor feel damp, yet they should be changed, care being observed to keep the feet always warm. As long as one is walking, the circulation is keep up, no matter how wet the feet may be, but the instant you remain quiet it is checked, unless the stockings quiet it is checked, unless the stockings and shoes be changed. Holding the feet but a few minutes to a fire or over a register, is not sufficient, as you only by that dry the external part of the shoe or boot. If the feet are cold they should be rubbed thoroughly with a rough towel until warmth has been restore!, when they might be, if desired, held for a short time before the fire. Jumping out of bed and walking about on the carpet, as is too often done, should be avoided. A pair of slippers can be so placed by the bed at night, when retiring, as to be accessible on rising.

MARINE MISCELLANY.

Br brig Formosa, at Gloucester yesieday from Jamaica for Boston, reports: Jan 11th. fell in with the Br brig Royal standard, from Philadelphia for for Gibraltar, dismasted and foll of water took off all hands, including the captain's wife, and brought them to this port. The crew were all more or less frostbitten.

Bark Otter, Faulkner, of Halifax, NS. 27 tons register, with petroleum from Philadelphia for Havre, went into the bay of Newport in the height of the gale 30th ult. and anchored inside Clare Island, but toward evening dragged her anchors and drove ashore at Molvany (Newport). In going ashore the steward was drowned, and a man was lost off the yard before the ship entered the bay. With these exceptions the crew were safe, but with the loss of their clothes. The constabilary and country people rendered every assistance. The vessel would become a total wreck, but it was hoped the cargo would be saved.
