

A "Fall Dress" Story.

The New York correspondent of the London Spectator tells the following pleasant tale: The same woman will be at the opera on one evening in full dress as a private box, and if she don't own a box at the next performance in the stalls or the parterre with arms, shoulders and head all covered. A lady whom I knew had rather an unpleasant experience in an attempt some years ago to disregard the tacit understanding among hotels, she belonged to an ultra-fashionable set and having married a South Carolina planter, soon adopted what we call "plantation manners," and affected no little scorn of simple manners, reserved New England folk. She was at Newport, our great seaside watering place, and having just returned from Europe, took great airs upon herself. One evening at the tea-table, a gentleman sat down near her, and the butter plate before him happened to have no butter-knife by it at the moment, and instead of calling the waiter and waiting for one to be brought, used his own perfectly fresh bright knife to take a bit of butter.

He was a man of culture and social standing, but a Yankee, and one whose social pretensions she resented. She seized the opportunity, and called a waiter, said in an elaborately subdued, but decided tone, "Take away that butter." He took no notice of the remark, which drew all upon him the lady; but by and by she stretched out her hand and took from the plate some chipped dried beef, which stood between her and her victim. This was well enough, of course; but he turned at her, and said, "You are a Yankee, and you are asking for more tea." "Take away that dried beef, this lady had her fingers in it." In this encounter, such as it was, he was thought to have had the best of it, and she did not forgive or forget. So a few days afterwards (I should have mentioned that there was the slightest possible acquaintance between them), they being at dinner, she conspicuous in the full dress she had adopted since her tour to Europe, and which was so very "faint" that it would have attracted attention under any circumstances, took one from a dish of fresh figs before her and putting it on a plate, handed it to him with an expression of complaisance, but saying in a tone of unmistakable significance, "What a fine fig for you, sir!" He accepted it graciously, and taking in his turn a leaf from the garniture of the dish offered it to her, "A fig-leaf for you, Madam." She fled the table, and kept her room until her intended victim left. He was generally agreed that he had done what a gentleman would shrink from doing; but the provocation was such that he was held guilty of offence, and applauded for his wit, and nobility, except perhaps a few of her slavobonding friends, puffed her. This is the last instance that I know of, of a lady's appearance in full dress at a public table. But I am told that within the last three or four years it is coming more in fashion among the "fastest" sets at the height of the season at Saratoga, and one or two others of our gayest watering places.

SKATING EXPERIENCES.—A sufferer who has been on the ice thus describes his tribulations after getting his feet on one of those from my bended position and struck out. At this moment a voice from among the outside observers saluted my ears with—"Ge-whill-ll-kins there goes a big thing on it." Simultaneously, I started the ice in a sitting posture, and didn't see stars until I arose, when I observed a constellation transfixed in the ice where I made my debut. Regaining my equilibrium I essayed a sweeping glance—when a voice from the outside called out, "Hello, mister, ain't you insured?" I, however, was not sure of anything just then, for one of my skates started forward and in an endeavor to collect my feet together I again sat down, executing a few efforts at ground and air, and finally—"One more star, girl exclaimed, just loud enough for me to hear, "Why, the poor fellow will break his neck if some one don't help him."

Nature, in forming man, must have had an eye to the consequences, and he baffle one just learning to skate. My neck was not injured or bruised. The contusion was not far off the lower terminus of the spinal column. Several of the ladies looked sympathizingly at me as they swiftly and gracefully glided past me—and the outside observers increased in numbers and impudence. I again assumed the attitude of God's noblest work-man—and just as I did so, a voice came screaming over the fence—"Ho, you—going to the ice?" Of course my feelings were hurt—but, smothering my indignation, I essayed another effort in the gliding art, but through an accident—very natural and common with beginners—the toe of one of my skates became attached to the strap on the other, and notwithstanding my balance was forward movement received additional impetus, and grasping wildly at the air, I resolved to rest awhile. The blood ran from my mouth and nose, for both came in contact with the icy surface, producing additional contusions. In this instant Jenkins whizzed past me, humming—"There's fun upon the ice, boys, with their champagne and cognac."

I again rose—after stopping the hemorrhages—smiling, but somewhat "groggy," as they say in the London P. R. Looking at myself, I discovered that in my efforts to resist a while my pants had caught on the ice, tearing a rent in them in a delicate place.

THE GREAT CENTRAL STATES.—A census taken in Illinois last year has been taken up and shows the population reaching 2,250,000. On the strength of this Ohio papers are calculating that in 1870 it will be the third State in the Union. Statements based on these intermediate enumerations are very uncertain, and the States which in comparison is made, and in this case there is no ground for the belief that Ohio has stood still while Illinois has been going ahead. It would have been about as sensible to say that in 1850 Illinois will be the first State in the Union since her rate of increase would warrant the expectation. Ohio, like Pennsylvania, took no census in 1850. New York and Illinois did. New York found to her surprise that she had not increased at all, while Illinois showed over half a million more people than she had in 1850. This is very gratifying for Illinois, but it affords no ground for presuming that Ohio has stood still and

NOT PROSPERED AT ALL.

In this case, however, Ohio is treated in the same way that some of her own calculators undertook, in 1850, to treat Pennsylvania. They estimated their State ahead of us after the same fashion, and received credit for it all over the country, until the census of the year 1870 showed the reverse of the pretence. The remarkable development of Illinois by railroads has produced her increase. But in Pennsylvania there are good reasons for believing that there has not been less progress and perhaps much more. Since 1850 the whole northwestern section of our State has been alive with the development of the oil, coal and iron regions, and the building of railroads has gone on beyond all precedent. In like manner the vast coal and iron interests in the east of the State, but especially in the east, have thriven. We do not, in consequence of this, estimate that in 1870 we will pass New York in the list of States, though we might do so with as much justice as Illinois expects to pass Ohio.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.
