From the Orkney Herald. A melancholy shipwreck, involving the loss of ten lives, occurred off the island of Graemsay, in Hoy Sound, on New Year's Day. The ill-fated vessel was the Albion, (Capt. Thomas Williams,) a full-rigged snip of 1,225 tons, bound from Liverpool to New York with a general cargo and forty three passengers, mostly Germans, on board. The crew, including the efficers, numbered twenty-four in all. From the time when she left Liverpool, twelve days previous the Albion had experienced very storm weather, her sails being torn to shreds, her cordage worn out, and three of her boats destroyed ere she made the Orkney coast She marrowly escaped shipwreck on St. Kilda, and bore up for Orkney, after a des-perate but abortive attempt to reach Stornovay. When Hoy was sighted the crewere very much exhausted by continuously laboring at the pumps and working the ship. On New Year's day the wind blow with great violence, accompanied by occasional blinding showers of hail and snow, and a heavy sea was breaking along the Atlantic seaboard of the islands. About noon the Albion, with very little canvas set, was observed standing in for Hoy Sound from the westward. On reaching the worth of the dangerous sound a onal blinding showers of hail and snow, the mouth of the dangerous sound a foretopsail was set, and just at this critical moment a fierce hall-storm came on, hiding the ship from the view of those who were anxiously watching her progress. When the hall cleared off the Albion was seen brought up in the sound in a danger-ous position opposite the island of Graem say. Two pilots from the Island rapidly made their way on board. By their advice the cables were being cut, but ere this was effected the ship began to drag her anchor, and became quite unmanageable from her want of canvas. Dragging still to leeward, she struck heavily at last on the Point of Oxen, in the Island of Graemsay. In a short time, so yielent was the contact of the vessel with the rocks, the hatches sprang up, and the deck planks split from stem to stern. Among the passengers there were a number of women and children, and a scene of the most heart-rending description ensued. Several boats immediately put off to the ship from Graemsay, Hoy, and Strom-ness, and the mail steamer, which was fortunately at hand, also approached the scene of disaster to render assistance. As the vessel, from being fast on the rocks, appeared to be rapidly breaking up, the women, children and male passengers were got into the boats without delay, and the great proportion of them, after considerable effort, were landed in safety. The second trip of one of the boats, however, terminated in a sad catastrophe. With fourteen persons on board, nine of whom were male passengers, she had got along side of the mail steamer, which lay as close as possible to the wreck. In their anxiety to be taken out, the passengers rush ed to one side, capsizing the boat and ten of the unfortunate beings perished. Of these seven were male passengers, two belonged to the crew of the Albion, and the remaining victim was a young man, Joseph Mowat, son of Captain Mowat, of Graemsay. Two passengers and two seamen were alone saved out of the boatload. When the boat capsized, Mr. James Shearer and others gallantly put off in the small boat of the mail steamer to do what they could in rescuing the drowning men. They picked up the four who were saved, and a fifth, who appeared to be a good swimmer, was followed until it was found impossible to venture farther amid the rough sea into which the strong current had dragged the poor fellow, who battled had dragged the poor fellow, who battled long and bravely against his hard fate. The daylight was beginning to fade, the flood tide was about to come in, when the captain, mate and steward, who were the last to leave the ship, took to a boat, and reached the shore in safety. Before 5 o'clock the once stately Albion was completely broke up, and the Graemsay beach was strewed with pieces of the wreck and portions of the cargo. The passengers and crew, who lost the whole of their effects, obtained accommodations for the night in the two lighthouses of Graemsay. On the following day they were taken off by the mail steamer and landed at Stromness, where they were taken in charge by Messrs. Mowat & Hay, Lloyd's agents.

The passengers, many of whom were in an utterly destitute condition, were treated with great kindness by the people of Strom-ness, who supplied them with food, shelter, and comfortable clothing. Some of the cases were of a very distressing character. A German woman, with two children, had lost her husband, all the money they had being in his possession when he perished. Another German woman had also lost her husband, and two sisters lost a brother each. The greater portion of the crew of the ill-fated ship arrived in Kirkwell on Wednesday night, waiting the arrival of the steamsr to carry them to the south. The following are the names of the Shetland part of the crew, all of whom were sayed—James W. Williamson, Unst; James C. Jamieson, Unst, and James Henderson, Lerwick. On Thursday the passengers, who were grateful for the kindness which had been shown tnem in Stromness, left that port by the packet Reaper. Owing to the rapidity with which the vessel broke up, little has been recovered from the wreck. Some crates of stoneware, we understand, were carried by the gurent to Houton, Shore a distance of the current to Houton Shore, a distance of the miles from the scene of the wreck.

Whole Family Sufficiented with Gas-Miraculous Escape From Beath.

[From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.]

An accident from ass occurred on Those

An accident from gas occurred on Tuesday night in Allegheny city, by which a whole family were suffocated almost to death. It appears that the gas pipe leading from the main one into the cellar of Mr. Owen's house which is located on the lower part of Rebecca street, had burst about 7 o'clock in the evening, and was rapidly filling the cellar and rooms above with gas. Mr. Owens becoming-alarmed and fearful that an explosion might take place, immediately sent a messenger to the Gas Company's office, to have the gas stopped off. The ny's office, to have the gas stopped on. The company despatched a workman to the place. He stated that he could do nothing with the pipe as it had bursted in the street and could not be repaired until morning. He cautioned Mr. Owens to use no light about the cellar, as the gas was escaping so freely that an explosion would certainly take place if light was applied. The house which Mr. Owens occupies is one in a row of ten brick dwellings all built for in a row of ten brick dwellings all built together, the cellars being separated from each other by light frame partitions, Mr. Owens at once notified his neighbors residing in the other buildings of the row that the gas was leaking and filling his cellar, and that it would likely find its way into all the other houses, and they should be careful in using lights. The neighbors heeded the warning, and thus, perhaps, a terrible explosion was prevented.

Mr. Robert McGraw, doing business in the Diamond, this city, occupied the fourth house of the row with his mother and sisters. He took the precaution of airing all in a row of ten brick dwellings all built to-

The Diamond, this city, occupied the fourth house of the row with his mother and sisters. He took the precaution of airing all the rooms of the house, excepting one, before he retired for the night, as the smell of gas was sickening and offensive. His mother was to have put up the window of her room upon retiring, but she forgot to do so. The room was a double one, and was occupied by Mrs. McGraw and her three daughers, Saide, Jennie and Mary. There was no fire in the room, and a close-fitting fireboard stopped ventilation by way of the chimney. The mother and girls retired to rest, and gradually the room commenced to fill with gas, and as it had no means of escaping, was breathed by the sleepers. Mary awoke about five o'clock in the morning, and feeling faint and dizzy, called her mother, but received no answer. She then endeavored to get out of bed, which she finally did, and staggering to her mother's bedside, fell insensible to the floor. The noise of the fall aroused Mrs. McGraw, who got up, and out of bed, and immediately fell insensible by the side of Mary. Mr. Robert McGraw, hearing the fall of the mother awoke, and upon entering the bed chamber was nearly suffocated with the oder of gas He hoisted the window in order that the air in the room should be purified. Finding his mother and sister apparently lifeless upon the floor, he went to the bed where the other two girls were sleeping, and found them both insensible. Medical aid was at once summoned, and after some time, mother and three girls were revived; but Sadie and Jennie were in a very low condi-tion last night. They are both favorably known to the musical community as amateur pianists and vocalists, and it is to be hoped that they will recover.

The escape from death of the girls and mother from suffocation, was miraculous, and we think that the official of the gas company is censurable for not turning off the gas in that district when called upon to do so. The lives of the members of ten families, should not have been placed in such great jeopardy, simply because it was difficult to repair the pipe at night. Mr. F. H. Cooley, of the Gazette; who resides in the house next door to that of Mr. McGraw, returned home that morning from the office at about two o'clock, and found his house full of gas. He thoroughly ventilated the rooms and retired, but upon getting up in the morning he felt a peculiar dizziness arising from inhaling the gas during his sleep, XXXXXth CONGRESS FIRST SESSION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27. WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.

House — The House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. Washburne (III.) in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the President's Annual

Mr. Smith (Ky.) concluded the remarks heretofore commenced, saying, among other things, that the doctrine which was initiated during the war by the Union party was that secession was a heresy, and that it violated all the principles of the Constitution and laws on which our government was established the principles of the Constitution and laws on which our government was established the constitution and laws on which our government was established the constitution and laws on which our government was established the constitution and laws on which our government was established the constitution and laws on which our government was established to be constituted as a second constitution and laws on which our government was established to be constituted as a second constitution and laws on which our government was that the constitution and laws of the constit lished. In maintaining this position he re-ferred to the record of authority made by Congress, running through four years, and quoted from the remarks of distinguished entlemen in and outside of this House. We ne said, carried on the war, as a Union party, for the express purpose of keeping the eleven Southern States in the Union, where they were from the beginning and are to-day. In maintaining this position he did not intend to compromise any principle heretofore assumed by the great party of the Union. The Southern States, being in the Union, are entitled to representation; but he would not admit their members here uness they could stand up here and swear that they have never assisted in the attemp to overthrow the government. If they could not do this, he would send them back to their constituents, to try it over again; and f they should not then return loyal mer here, who could take that oath, he would again send them back, until they could answer the requirement by sending hither Union men to legislate for the great Amerian nation.

Mr. Baker (Ill.) said that to his mind two fundamental principles had been presented. One of them was firmly adhered to by the small Democratic opposition in this House; also apparently favored by a few of the members of the overwhelming Union party. It was clear that in order to restore the lately rebellious States to their normal position Congress had nothing to do but to act unde that clause of the Constitution which gives to each House the right to judge of the elec tion, qualifications and returns of its own members. The other fundamental idea was in keeping with the highest prerogative of Congress, and demanded by the people, namely, that we should go behind the mere surface of the elections, qualifications and returns of members. The conditions prece-dent to the restoration of the Southern States did not depend upon the Executive, but upon the National Legislature, which should take measures to amend the Constitution before readmitting the lately rebellious State to power. Already one amendment had been ratified, to abolish slavery throughout the country; but four other guarantees were still required by the loyal people: First, to place it beyond question that no State has the right to secede; second, that state has the right to secede; second, that none of the States should be burdened with or called upon to pay the rebel debts; third, placing representation on the basis of political justice, so that all loyal people may be protected; and fourth, forever excluding high officers who took part in the rebellion, either in the civil or military service, from holding office under the Government. He held that it was the duty of Congress to fix up the house for future accommodation, and until that time the Southern States Mr. Broomall (Pa.) said the great prob-lem was, what should be done with the people lately in rebellion, on the solution of which depended the continuance of the country for ages. There were, he contended, no rights of the vanquished to embarrass our action, either in receiving the old States or keeping the conquered country in a territorial condition, as either may best subserve the interests of the entire nation. The States of the South combined and continued the war for four years against the government. They were recognized as a nation by foreign Powers, and also by our own. Surrendering without terms, the combination was broken up and became a conquered people. A conquered people have no rights, civil or political. The victor may exact all the guarantees necessary to prevent the recurrence of hostilities, and the conqueror is the sole judge of the guarantees. In civil war, the conquered can be treated either as traitors or as prisoners of war. If they are treated as the latter, thidid away with the distinction between na tional and civil law. Mr. Nihlack inquired whether the States lately in rebellion were not now States in the Union? Mr. Broomall replied the organized communities of the South were not, in his opinion, fully in the Union. If he had thought so he would not have voted for the resolution to raise a committee on reconstruction. His position was, the government has a right to pursue that policy which it may deem best, unembarrassed by any rights of the rebels. The conquered people have no rights, excepting such as may be obtained by the acts or permission of the general government, since the surrender. The President has taken possession of the South as a conqueror, and has founded of the South as a conqueror, and has founded new States on the ruins of the old ones, ignoring the fact that they were bodies politic. New States were erested by proclamation. If any gentleman could produce a creed more radical than this it would be restanting. freshing. The President, however, could not make a State of the Union. What he not make a State of the Union. What he had done was only a temporary expedient, forced by the necessity of the occasion. Nothing but the supreme power of the government was competent to provide for the admission of States. Any system of reconstruction that did not effectually guarantee the rights of the Union men of the South could not have his support.

The House then adjourned.
