THE REVENUE COMMISSION.

Our national legislators, when they found That every glass of whisky they surround, Had to support a most astounding tax, To their own interests thought they had been lax. Distillers, too, were making quite a touse, And sent petitions to the lower house, Saying that whisky was of such good use, That we the tax upon it should reduce. so after a most spirited debate. (By the representatives of every State),
And one which great commotion has produced,
They may decide the tax should be reduced. And but a single dollar may be willed To be the tax on liquor that's distilled And all the topers now are growing frisky, And hall the day at hand of cheaper whisky. But we must leave them to their spirits gay. And speak about the business milky way. And of that "STAR' which does so brightly glow, Clothing so many people, as we know. And ere we close we venture this advice To those who seek fine raiment at low price. Buy a new outfit at that great Bazaar,

EVENING BULLETIN.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1866.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE. The sixth annual message of Governo Curtin will be read throughout our Comsatisfaction. That Pennsylvania should of the past years, in which she has borne so noble a part, not only with unimpaired strength but with increased prosperity, is a solid cause for congratulation. Through all this crisis of our national history, the Governors of the loval States have occupied positions of the most onerous and harrassing responsibility, and in nearly every instance the responsibility has been faithfully and unfortunate exceptions, such as Seymour of New York, where the Gubernatorial office has been used only to clog and hamper the efforts of the Government to suppress the rebellion, but such cases are happily very few. In the message just sent to the Legislature by Governor Curtin, we have a condensed and well-digested statement of Pennsylvania's share in the war for the Union, and we read it with just pride and satisfaction. We learn that, in spite of the heavy drain of the war, our finances have been so well managed and our resources so well developed, that our State Treasury is in a far better condition than when Governor Curtin assumed the duties of his office. On the 30th of November, 1860, the liabilities in excess of assets were $26,408,168, and at the same date in 1865, they were $23,-$52,589, showing a reduction of the surplus debt of $2,555,579 during his administration. We learn further, that in addition to militia and naval enlistments. Pennsylvania actually furnished 362,284 men to the armies of the Union, and that these troops were put in the field with a promptness and efficiency of condition that called out the encomiums of the Government at Washington, of the commanders of the army and Governors of other States. The first troops that reached Washington in the perilous crisis of the spring of 1861 were Pensylvanians, and when the capital of the nation was the second time threatened, after the battle of Bull | Run, the regiments of the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps were the first troops sent forward. Pennsylvania was the rock upon which the invading waves of the rebellion burst with their fiercest fury, and our loyal Governor, with a loyal people at his back, rendered noble service to the whole country in beating back the tide of war from our borders, until at Gettysburg the rebellion met its death-blow.

We do not propose to go into any detailed review of Governor Curtin's message. It is filled with wise and practical suggestions, looking towards the greater prosperity of the State, and the welfare of various classes of our citizens. It has special regard to the claims of our soldiers upon the General Government, Board of Revision; for the City Comwhich have not yet been recognized nor missioners would be in the majority, work of governing a great Commonwealth like ours.

From the outset of the rebellion, Governor Curtin has devoted himself to the cause of his country and to the interests of the soldiers of Pennsylvania with a persistent earnestness that has won for him the proudest reward man can win, the gratitude and affection of a whole great people. Entering upon his office with robust health, with his stalwart frame in the prime of manly vigor, he will retire from it with health broken down, enfeebled and prematurely aged by the cares and labors which have been devolved upon him. But he will carry with him the consciousness of duty well done, with a record of patriotic and selfdenying service to his State and to his country, and with the hearty appreciation of those who have watched his career with admiration, and who will gladly give him the approving "Well done, good and faithful servant!" when his term of arduous service shall close.

SELF-RESPECT VERSUS PAUPERISM. It will be remembered that some time since Mr. Peabody, the famous English banker, made a most munificent gift to the "Poor of London." It appears that the gift was accompanied by a stipulation that it should be so employed as to render it reproductive, so that not the present only, but future generations, might share in its benefits. It was therefore decided, after due consideration, to expend the fund in the erection of model lodging houses on a large scale, in which the really deserving poor might be enabled to obtain a decent home at a lower rate than that which they commonly pay for the most wretched accommodations-a boon which few can fail to appreciate. The result has been that the trustees have erected model lodging houses in Spitalfields, to accommodate two hundred persons; at Islington for six hundred and fifty, and at Shadwell for the same number; while at Bermondsey and Chelsea erections of the same kind on a similar extensive scale are already in progress. An English newspaper, from which we glean these facts, says: "The amount of good thus accomplished is not easy to over-estimate, while the plan adopted has the advantage over ordinary charitable schemes of not lowering the self-respect of those who receive its benefits."

We like the spirit of the closing remark of the English editor. Not only in England, but in our own country, the system adopted of affording relief to the poor is such as to lower their selfrespect and to pauperize them in body and soul forever. Men or women who spend a season in the Almshouse are rarely ever anything but paupers for the remainder of their lives. They have monwealth with the most unfeigned learned to look to the public for support; they realize that they are paupers, selfrespect has been lowered, ambition has been quenched and the creature sinks into hopeless pauperism. Upon the other hand, set them at work and treat them with decent consideration; let them feel that although they are under a cloud temporarily, they are earning their own living, and they will probably emerge from their misfortunes with a self-respect that will prompt them to push themselves forward in the world, and a selfbravely met. We have had one or two reliance that will sustain them and give a profitable direction to their efforts for self-support and self-dependence. It is pitiful enough to visit an almshouse where adult paupers are lodged; blank white-washed walls; wooden forms; shortcut hair for both sexes; uniform garments of the coarsest material; meals without variety and partaken of with almost mechanical regularity; an aimless existence and a monotony of life that is scarcely ever varied; these are the marked peculiarities of all the almshouses we have ever visited. Can it be wondered at that their inmates sink into the condition of poor degraded creatures, without hope, without ambition and without self-respect? We repeat that it is bad enough to see grown men and women in this pitiable condition of pauperism; but how much more pitiable it is to see tender children reared amid such depressing influences? The managers of too many charitable institutions for youth fail to appreciate the fact that children are not mere machines, to eat their meals in gloomy silence, to sit so many hours a day upon wooden forms, to say certain set lessons and to go to bed at a given hour to close a cheerless day with a gloomy night. They fail to appreciate that young minds require to be stimulated, that young hearts crave love and joy, that young

Certain parties from this city are at Harrisburg endeavoring to get the Legislature to pass a bill consolidating the Board of Revision of Taxes and the City Commissioners. This would have the effect of depriving the citizens of Philadelphia of all the benefits of the discharged. It does not forget those who and we should have the old system, with have been bequeathed as a precious all its evils, perpetuated in an aggralegacy to the State, the orphans of the vated form. We trust that the Legisline of policy which it indicates is Philadelphia tax-payers, and will refuse eminently prudent and patriotic, the to listen to the appeals and cajoleries of result of long experience in the difficult | the interested parties who are trying to bring about this great wrong.

> FIRE- CRAPS. A fire yesterday morning destroyed, in whole or in part, five out of six of a block of large warehouses and a great quantity of valuable merchandize. The stores destroyed and damaged were among the most massive along the Delaware front of the city. The facade upon the river front was of ornamental ironwork, and the structures throughout were constructed of the most substantial materials. It is difficult to realize that these buildings erected so recently as 1850, upon the very spot where the greatest conflagration that ever took place in Philadelphia commenced. should be constructed so carelessly that when a fire broke out in one there was nothing to prevent the spread of the flames until the whole were in ruins or greatly damaged. The want of simple parapet walls, that would have cost but a few thousand dollars when the buildings were orlginally put up, has involved a loss of hundreds of thousands probably; for the flames would not have extended beyond the store where they originated had this precaution been adopted. The present building law forbids the erection of buildings without protecting parapets, and there is consequently no danger of a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy constructing such colossal fire-traps in the future; but there are other defects in the prevalent modes of building which recent destructive conflagrations have demonprovides no remedy. THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. We have already announced the appointment of Judge Allison to take the place of the lamented Judge Thompson as President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas. It is now officially announced that William S. Peirce, Esq., has been appointed to fill the place made vacant by the promotion of Judge Allison. Mr. Peirce is a well known member of the Philadelphia bar. He was admitted to practice in June, 1845, and during his twenty-one years of experience he has won for himself the reputation of being a sound lawyer and a conscientious advocate. He is known to be cautious and pains-taking, and his appointment will doubtless be equally satisfactory to the legal profession and the public generally.

MR. PERELLI'S OPERA.-Concert Hall has been tastefully arranged, with stage and scenery, for a series of amateur operatic performances, under direction of Mr. Perelli, the principal parts being taken by his pupils. The first performance was given last evening, before a large and fashionable audience. The opera was Clarissa Harlowe, composed by Mr. Perelli, which has been played in several European cities. It is written strictly in the modern Italian style, with numerous graceful melodies, several effective concerted pieces, and some good choruses. For a first representation by amateurs, it had a very satisfactory success; and it will doubtless be much better done at the second representation, next Tuesday. Miss Hewlett, who takes the part of "Clarissa," has a beautiful flexible soprano voice, which she manages extremely well. Mr. Durand, Mr. Schmitz. Mr. Nathans and Mr. Bourke, all did well. The orchestra was a full one and was well directed by Mr. Perelli himself. The applause during the performance was frequent and hearty.
