BUSINESS NOTICES.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER OF MAXIMILIAN TO NAPOLEON.

"To speak candidly, I must confess that my present situation gives me great uneasiness. My troops are in danger of actual starvation, and it is no small matter to keep them supplied with clothing. But this is not the worst; for, surrounded as we are by a hostile population, and with such formidable neighbors as the United States so close at hand, I could scarcely feel easy if provisions were ever so abundant, and Clothing could be obtained here as cheap and as good as at the celebrated Tower Hall!"

We have the largest and best stock of Clothing in Philadelphia, selling at prices guaranteed lower than the lowest elsewhere.

TOWER HALL,
No. 518 Market Street,

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.

The usual quiet of our pleasant city
Is now disturbed, and we think more's the pity,
To think that spirit, spook, or even ghost,
Should exercise the simple minds of most.
But unknown spirits in a house, 'tis said,
Send pictures, plates and Bibles at one's head,
And model ships go floating through the air,
Driving the inmates nearly to despair.
We think it wrong for evil spirits thus
To be disturbing people with their fuss;
And think straight out the key-hole of the door
They should at once depart and reappear no more.

We have heard some doubts expressed as to the fact of the demonstrations having taken place at all, but no one doubts the reality of the low prices and fashionable goods to be had at the great "STAR" Clothing Emporium.

EVENING BULLETIN.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1866.

THE JUDICIARY.

The death of Judge Oswald Thompson has awakened a wide-spread attention to the importance of the Court over which he presided, and the absolute necessity of an increase in the number and the remuneration of the Judges. The career of Judge Thompson since he took his seat on the bench of the Court of Common Pleas has been one of the most unblemished purity, the most unselfish devotion, the most arduous and ceaseless labor, and the most oppressive responsibility. He succeeded one of the most brilliant and distinguished jurists that has ever adorned the Philadelphia bench and bar, the Hon. Edward King, and so filled the great void made by the retirement of that eminent lawyer and judge, that this Court has lost none of its former renown, but has maintained itself before the community with a wisdom and dignity and purity of which every citizen of Philadelphia should feel proud.

The extent of jurisdiction of the three Judges of the Court of Common Pleas is almost incredible. The Common Pleas, the Orphans' Court, and the Court of Oyer and Terminer are all under their care. The business of the Orphans' Court alone involves the whole pecuniary interests of the community. Once at least in every thirty-three years, every dollar of property in the city of Philadelphia must pass through the hands of this Court, and the detail of this business constantly involves questions of the nicest delicacy, requiring the clearest judgment and the most thorough knowledge of law. The Criminal Court holds within its jurisdiction the gravest questions of the life and death of our citizens. It is in this Court that the guilty are brought to be punished and the innocent to be vindicated and protected. It sits in judgment over the ballot-box itself, defending its purity and protecting the community from the consequences of political fraud and corruption, and in the countless phases of human crime it stands calmly and dispassionately administering justice and separating the right from the wrong. The Common Pleas takes within its jurisdiction the whole civil litigation of this vast community, which does not fall within the province of the District Court or the Nisi Prius branch of the Supreme Court, which transacts, comparatively, but little business; and over all this mass of business, demanding incessant study and attention, great physical endurance and mental activity, and above all the most persistent impartiality and integrity, Oswald Thompson presided through many years of his office, for the paltry remuneration of twenty-eight hundred dollars per annum!

The man who quietly dies at his post of duty, knowing that health and strength are breaking down, and yet steadfastly fulfilling his appointed task, unflinching and uncomplaining, is as much a hero as he who falls at the head of his regiment, or goes down with his sinking ship, and very often he is more a hero. So Judge Thompson died, and his death has at last stirred up our people to ask why such good men should be worked to death upon a miserable pittance of a salary, in the service of a community as great and as wealthy as our's. Too late to benefit this victim to public parsimony, but not too late for those who come after him, a movement has been made to increase the number of our judges and to pay them living salaries.

The unanimous action of the bar of Philadelphia in this important matter should be cordially backed by the whole community; for there is no man, woman or child who is not interested in the purity and efficiency of our Courts of law. The Legislature has been applied to, to increase the number of Judges from three to five, and to make a liberal increase of the salaries, which are at present totally inadequate, and in no proportion whatever to the amount of labor to be performed or the degree of legal ability and personal character requisite for its performance. We hope there will be a prompt and generous response from Harrisburg to the appeal of the Philadelphia bar, and that the reproach which Judge Thompson's death brings upon our community may thus be taken away.

THE IMPERIAL SPEECH.

A careful reading of the text of the Emperor Napoleon's speech justifies all the misgivings that were raised by the first despatch concerning it. The part relating to the Mexican intervention cannot be regarded as satisfactory to the United States. The exact language in regard to the withdrawal of the troops is as follows:

"As I expressed the hope last year that our expedition was approaching its termination, I am coming to an understanding with the Emperor Maximilian to fix the epoch for the recall of our troops, before their return is effectuated, without compromising the French interests which we have been defending in that remote country."

This simply means that the troops will be withdrawn when the object of the expedition is fully and securely attained, and no sooner, unless some domestic convulsion or a ruptnre with a foreign power should make it necessary to have them at home. The passage which follows, in which "the great American Republic" is honored with the Imperial praise, is worth little. It is simply a piece of flattery meant to prepare for the succeeding sentences, which read thus:

"The emotion produced in the United States by the presence of our troops on the Mexican soil will be pacified by the frankness of our declarations, and the American people will comprehend that our expedition, to which we invited them, was not opposed to their interests. Two nations, equally jealous of their independence, ought to avoid every step which might affect their dignity and their honor."

The "frankness" on which the Emperor plumes himself is a little hard to discover; and the suggestion that the United States was invited to join in the expedition is something in the nature of a taunt; for when it was proposed, the Emperor knew perfectly well that our Government, if it had been willing, was utterly unable to accede to the proposal. We had the immense work on hand of suppressing the rebellion, and but for that, the Emperor would not have ventured to send a soldier to Mexico. He knew that our fixed policy is against intervention in foreign countries, and that even if it had not been so, we could not have interfered at that time. We repeat that there is no reason for any great exultation over the expressions in the Emperor's speech. It simply shows an anxiety to appease the United States, without offering anything substantial.

The passage referring to the internal condition of Mexico is also disingenuous. It calls Maximilian's establishment "the Government founded by the will of the people!" No people ever had less to do with the creation of a Government than the Mexicans had with Maximilian's. There was no affinity of any kind between Mexico and Austria. A German prince, living five thousand miles away, was selected by a French Emperor, to rule over a mixed Spanish and Indian people, and everything was arranged without giving the Mexicans a chance to express an opinion on the subject. Maximilian did not dare to go near Mexico until it was a conquered province of France.

In the absorbing interest of the passages in the speech relating to Mexico and the United States, one is apt to overlook the parts relating to the internal condition of France. The specious phrases meant to persuade the people that they are living under the best system of Government that could be devised, betray a little uneasiness and seem to deprecate an apprehended opposition. He requests the people to put implicit faith in him, and not to suffer themselves to be "seduced by plausible theories," and he looks forward to the day when all Frenchmen shall be educated to an unalterable devotion to Napoleonism. That is the meaning of the concluding passage. Will the day ever arrive?

DEMOCRATIC ROEBUCKS.

Some years ago the London Punch had a very funny cartoon representing the Hon. Mr. Roebuck, M. P., on the floor of Parliament, grasping his hat with both hands, pulling it down over his own eyes, and shouting frantically: "Mr. Speaker! I despise—everybody!" We are reminded of Mr. Roebuck by the action of the Democratic Convention of New Hampshire, which has passed a series of resolutions, which are just about as discriminating as the eccentric member for Sheffield. These resolutions may be briefly stated thus: "Resolved, That we approve of Andrew Johnson. Resolved, That we are opposed to all amendments to the Constitution." This is a concise and comprehensive creed. The broad mantle of the "patriotic party," whose leaders denounced and hunted Andrew Johnson as long as they dared to do so, is proposed to be thrown over his administration. Fortunately the President is very familiar with that ancient garment. He knows every patch and hole and darn in its ragged and worn materials. He knows all the kennels through which the Democratic leaders have dragged it, these five years past, and he will have none of it. Democratic politicians, North and South, stand along his path, as thick as "touters" on Chatham street, calling his attention to their "choice stock of cheap and elegant garments;" but he brushes along past them, far too old a bird to be lured by their somewhat hoarse and cracked syren song.

But the second resolution of the "unterrified" of New Hampshire is the Roebuckian one. "We are opposed to everything; we object to everybody! Slavery makes no difference; emancipation makes no difference; war or peace; Union or Secession; victory or defeat; poverty or wealth;—no consequence whatever. The country is always the same; the condition of things never changes; the wants of the people never increase; the relations of the sections cannot alter; what was, must be;—Hurrah for the Constitootion! Down with amendments! and—all patriotic citizens vote for us at the next election!" Some persons may possibly think that the Democracy is slightly conservative in these views. Some will go so far as to say that it is not quite up to the requirements of the times. There are good people, and true who believe that a Constitution made in one century and for one condition of national existence, may need amendment in another century and under radically new relations. But the Democracy pulls its battered beaver over its eyes, and shouts, "We object to everything! Vote for us!"

Mr. Roebuck did not bring Parliament to his way of thinking by his wholesale objection to "everybody," and we are inclined to think that the wheels of legislation in Congress will experience but a very slight jar from the obstacles thrown in their way by the Democratic Convention of New Hampshire.

MENDELSSOHN'S "ELIJAH."—The first performance of this great oratorio by the Handel and Hayda Society will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock, at a dress rehearsal at the Musical Fund Hall. The second one will be to-morrow evening. It will be well done and every lover of music should try to hear both performances.
