Pennsylvania Legislature.

CLOSE OF YESTERDAY'S PROCEEDINGS. SENATE .- Mr. Randall presented the following papers:

To the Honorable the Senate of Pennsylva-*mia: I respectfully submit the annexed let-ter from my client, Mr. Tatlow Jackson and ask, that it may be placed on your re cord. The committee appointed by you to investigate the alleged corruption in the passage of a bill having reference to the consolidation of railroads in this State, have in their report, coupled me with others as having attempted to extort money from him by false and mischievous representations. They also accuse me of a pretended offi-ciousness around the capital in aid of the

In answer to these charges I here state that my services were sought by my client after the bill had been sent to Harrisburg, and returned to him with the assurance that it could not be passed. There was no offi-ciousness, nor pretended officiousness. I was retained to act as counsel, and my conduct was strictly in accordance with my professional duty. The annexed letter from Mr. Jackson defines my position as his counsel, and fully indorses my good faith and fidelity to him. I ask, as a matter of justice to me that this communication and letter may appear among your proceedings.

Letter from Tatlew Jackson.
PHILADRLPHIA, Jan, 24, 1866.—George
Northrop, Esq:—Dear Sir:—In looking over the reports of the Committees ap-pointed by the Legislature of the State to investigate alleged corruption in the passage of a bill (last March) supplementary to an act consolidating railroads in this State, I was sorry to note that the tenor of these reports implicate you as endeavoring to extort money from me by false represen-tations, and that after pretended officious-ness around the Capitol in aid of the bill, you, with others, intended to divide the money amongst you. I now address you with the wish to relieve you from this charge. I fully acquit you and Mr. Wm. H. Witte of this design, and am confident that in no case would either of you have retained any part of the $25,000.

The high appreciation I entertained of your abilities caused me to retain you, and I believe you acted in good faith for the interests of your abilities. terests of me, your client.
As to the $5,000, I have already approved of the disposition you made of it, as proven by the additional payment I made to you, With sincere regret that you have been subjected to annoyance on this subject, I am yours, truly, TATLOW JACKSON.

In view of the interest felt in cotton culture, and the number of people who think of investing in cotton lands, we give the following figures, from the current number of De Bow's Review. The editor of that periodical thinks that the resulting profits represent a minimum:
The following table shows the expenses incurred, and the profits received, in and from the cultivation of 1,250 acres of land— 1,000 in cotton and 250 in corn:

EXPENSES.

100 hands, at $10 per month,
100 barrels of pork at $40, 4,000 1.600 40 barrels of molasses at $40, Clothing for 100 hands at $50, 50 first-class mules, at $150, Wagons and farming implements, Oxen and cows, 5,000 bushels of corn, at $1, Hay and fodder, Overseer's wages, Assistant Overseer's wages, Medicines, medical attendance, &c., Carpenter's tools, cooking utensils, &c., Fee simple of land, at $20 per acre, Total, 1,000 bales of cotton—400 pounds each—at 30 cents, 7,500 bushels of corn, at $1, 7,500 5,000 50 mules, at $100 each, Oxen and cows, Carpenters' tools, &c.,

$159,000 Deduct expenses. Net profits, $84,600 Say but half of the above crop—200 pounds to the acre—is made, and the profits would still be $24,600, or almost the cost of the land, which, with the certain development of the South, must increase in value. It strikes us that the items for wages food. and clothing out to be increased in the above estimate. The freedmen will hardly consent to return to the provender of slaves. On the other hand, cotton will be more than thirty cents a pound. It seems to us that these figures show that intelligent enterprise, with ordinary luck, will insure a profit on capital invested of at least fifty per cent.- King Leopold.

From the New Orleans Picayune. We translate from the French this curious account of the domestic life and private character of the late King of the Belgians: "He was a tall, well-made man. He owed a good many feminine favors during his earlier years to his handsome personal appearance, and he was not a stranger to amiable qualities, which he retained to the end of his life. When he rose in the morning, his barber shaved his whole beard. He breakfasted, left the Chateau de Laeken. where he always lived, and came to the Palace, at Brussels. He always wore a general's uniform, and drove in town, alone, without a single aid-de-camp or equerry, in a four-horse coach. At the Brussels Palace he worked with the ministers, and returned to Lacken in time for dinner. He dined with his children; he rarely spoke to them, and managed them with a severe discipline: he passed the rest of the evening in a circle he had formed for himself, and into which none of his sons or the Duchess of Brabant was admitted. The most important portion of his day was the time he gave to work with his ministers. He saw very little of his family in domestic life; he lived on ill terms with them, and played the domestic tyrant, especially during the last few years, for reasons which we cannot mention here.* The royal family were always weary when they knew the King was at Lacken; the Duchess de Brabant especially suffered from this constraint. As soon as they heard the King had left for Brussels, their faces brightened and the Duchess, an intrepid Amazon, was soon in the saddle clapping spurs to her thorough-bred steed, or driving her low-hung buggy as fast as her horse could go. The King was extremely fond of music. His pianist would wait his orders standing in front of the piano. Leopold would appear, with a list of music in his hand, and numbers corresponding to the scores. The pianist had a copy of this list. He would say to the pianist, without ever replying to this salutation: "Number four!" The pianist would begin to play; the King, beating time, would walk from one room to another, when the piece ended, he would return and say: "Number eleven!" and then resume his walk through the rooms. Thie would last one or two hours, with intervals of half an hour sometimes before he would ask for a new piece. During this half hour the pianist would stand before his instrument waiting the King's orders. When the King tired he would send in a footman to tell the pianist, "That is enough." Life in the palace was very dull and stupid, and so much the duller because the King, living without a Court, was like all persons born poor and enriched by time, growing more stingy every year he lived. One day, at the beginning of his reign, he presented with his own hands, a banner to a choral society. He said as he gave it to the standard bearer, "It is The standard bearer replied in a tone intended to be flattering: "What you give, Sire, is never heavy!" This ingenious reply became popular at once, and was repeated with laughter from one to the other end of Belgium. The King's avarice was no secret to any oody in Belgium. Nevertheless in 1849 he abandoned to the Treasury one quarter of his privy purse, which contributed no little to his great popularity at that reduced to $600,000 a year, which was $200,000 less than it had been. Four years afterwards he asked Parliament to give his eldest son $100,000 a year. It was granted. Two years afterwards he asked an income of $30,000 a year for his second son. It was granted; when in 1858 he married his daughter to the Archduke Maximilian, he asked Parliament to give her a dowry; and Parliament, tired with these repeated demands refused almost unanimously. He never asked for anything afterwards. The fortune he leaves is estimated at eight or ten million dollars, the fruit of over exaggerated economy. Judge of his thrift y one example: Three years ago the Duchess de Brabant organized in her private circle of society private theatri-cals. The parts were distributed, committed to memory and rehearsals had made good progress. The Chateua de Laeken was admirably suited for private theatricals. It contained a theatre, but it had not been used for a great many years, and the crown architect was ques tioned to discover what it cost to fit it for use. He said about $1,600 of repairs was necessary. Nothing could bedone without the King's consent. The estimates were laid before him; his Majesty put them in a pigeon hole and they were never heard of again. Not a word was ever afterwards said about private theat-ricals in the royal family. The King lived alone in his family, as he lived alone in the country. He had not a sin-

Field Marshals, he never identified himself with the people he was called on to govern." This mystery was the existence of a morganatic wife—the Baroness Von——, a Hanoverian lady, Decorum forbade the introduction of his children, and especially of his daughter-in-law, into her presence. She acquired a good deal of influence over the King during the last years of his life, and his children were disposed to resent her interference whenever they thought they discovered traces of it. This occasionally led to ill-feeling on both sides. As soon as the King died, the Baroness Von —— quitted Laeken and Belgium for her estate in Hanover. She wore a widow's weeds. The King gave her at several times a sufficient amount of money to make her worth now some $200,000. It is stated the estate is not so great as is above mentioned; he leaves $6,000,000 at most. He, by his will, divides it into four equal parts; one to the Duke de Brabant, one to the Count de Flandre, a third to the Empress of Mexico, a fourth to his servants. Every dependent receives a suitable pension, and after all their claims are satisfied, the remainder on hand goes to the Count de Flandre.

Extraordinary efforts were made by the medical profession and the friends of the doomed man to secure the commutation of his sentence.

The land of this Company consists of about 120 acres in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, about 33 uiles from the town of Charlotte. On this property 15 shafts or pits have been opened and sunk to various depths from 10 to 85 feet, demotrating the existence of three parallel veins of ore of about 2 feet in width and about 15 feet apart; converging to a common centre at the depth of about 150 feet, for-ming one immense mass or vein of ore extending in ringth through the property more than half a m.le.
There are also on this property other veins of ore unexplored. All these ores are known as the brown ores. and are very rich, yielding an average of about $300 per ton in gold. The above results having been demonstrated by the rude working of the mines for several years past, the risk of investment in undeveloped property is not incurred, and by the application of modern mining and reducing machinery the Company anticipate an immediate and large return for their money.

Having an ore that readily yields $200 per ton, some estimate can be made of the value of this property, with the present imperfect system of mining. Ten tons of this ore can be taken out and reduced daily $45 per ton leaving a net daily profit of $1,730 for eac thaft worked by the Company.

The large working capital reserved will enable the Company at once to procure and erect the best modern machinery for manipulating the ores, by means of which the yield will be largely increased. These mines, whilst they produce ores moher than those of Celorado or Nevada, have many advantages over them, particularly in an abundance of fuel and sheep labor, and the facility with which they can be worked during the entire year, whilst those of Colorado and Nevada can only be worked during the warm weather.

A test assay of an average specimen of the one from the Carson Mines was made as late as the 17th of January, of the present year, as will appear from the ng certificate of Professors Booth and Garren the Assayers of the Philadelphia Mine PHILADELPHIA, January 27, 1966.

We have carefully assayed the sample of ore from Carson Mine, North Carolina, and find it to yield ten cunces nine penny weights of pure Gold to the ton of ore. The coin value is therefore $216 02 per ton of ore Yours respectfully,

DE. M. B. TAYLOR, 404 Walnut street,

Philadelphia. Subscriptions to the Capital Stock will be received at the office of the COMPANY, No. 407 Walnut street where samples of the ore may be seen and full information received.
