Jealousy, Murder, Suicide. One of the most terrible occurrences upon record—involving the murder of a wife by an old man of sixty, and his suicide afterward-took place in the township of Rockport, on Wednesday night or yesterday morning. Frederick Oden, a German aged sixty years, lived with his wife, aged fifty-five on his place on the Lorain street road about four miles from the city, and at the west end of what is known as the Ger man settlement. They had five child ren, three girls and two boys, the oldest twenty, and the youngest sixteen years of age. Oden was a well-to-do gardener and market-man, and had saved considerable money, with which he proposed to build a new house shortly.

For years-from her earliest recollect tion, one of the girls testified—Oden and his wife had quarreled. The cause of disagreement was always the same, his jealousy. He had frequently charged her with inconstancy. A quarrel upon this subject occurred between them on Thursday night of last week.

On Wednesday night, about twelve o'clock, she thinks, one of the daughters, Adelaide, who slept in a chamber, was awakened by hearing her fathe walking about on the floor beneath. Her father and mother had quareled on Wednesday and in the evening, and the daughter, remembering this, went to the stairway and called to the old man. He made some answer which the girl did not understand, and she returned to her bed. Soon after she heard her father leave the house, and becoming anxious, got up, and with a light went down to her parents' bedroom. Here she found her mother lying by her bedside, on the floor, dead. Frantic with fright, she rushed from the house, and by her cries gave the alarm. Michael Teigert, who lives on the same road, and opposite Oden's house, heard the cries of Adelaide, and very soon she and her sister ran into his house, saying that their mother had been killed. Teigert went across to Oden's house, but did not go in until Mr. Schuetz, another neighbor, arrived. The latter first entered and beheld the scene in the bed room.

Mrs. Oden lay in blood by the bedside. The bed showed it had been occupied, but there were no evidences of a struggle upon it. The floor of the room was covered with blood, but no weapon was discovered. There was a frightful gash, made with an axe, from Mrs. Oden's eye to her chin, which had evidently made impossible any outcries on her part From other wounds upon her body, it appears there had been a fierce and somewhat prolonged struggle. The woman's right arm was broken by a blow from the axe, and upon her lower limbs were various wounds, she had been literally disemboweled, also by blows from the savage weapon in the hands of her husband. A more complete and horrid butchery and mangling of the human form it would be difficult to conceive.

Oden was a strong man and his wife was a strong woman. The impression upon those who visited the scene yesterday was that Mrs. Oden was attacked aftergetting out of bed for some purpose, and had defended herself as long as pos-

It being night when the murder wa discovered, no traces of Oden could found. During the night the new spread about the neighborhoo соцестеа. daylight bloody tracks were discovered leading from the house, and then were followed. It was found that Ode had fled barefooted, avoiding roads and keeping to the woods and fields. By the bloody tracks he was followed a distance of four or five miles, until the murderer suicide was discovered. In the from yard of Mr. John N. West, of Rockpor is a pond. Oden was tracked to this, an a hole was seen in the ice. The axe wit which he had done the murder wa found here, stained with the woman blood, and had been used to cut the ic Several feet from this hole Oden's bod was discovered under the ice, indicating that he had made a plunge through th hole and rose to the ice at some distance making his escape impossible. His bod was recovered.

Coroner Schenck yesterday held an in quest on the body of Mrs. Oden. The facts elicited did not differ materially, at all, from those given above.

The body of Oden was conveyed to h late home yesterday, but no inquest was held. Friends of the family were pre-sent, and took charge of both bodies, making preparations for their interment Oden had borne a good character. He was an industrious, temperate man kind to his children, but. as before stated, violent to his wife when talking of her alleged unfaithfulness to him. One of his daughters is employed in this city; the others were at home.

No other cause than his accustomed jealousy and consequent altercations with his wife, can be assigned for his fearful acts of Wednesday night. His singular conduct in walking so far with bare feet, and carrying his axe, only te drown himself, is not explained by any-thing discovered at the investigation or previously known to his family or friends.

Romances.

As usual! The story ends with the heroine-heretofore a poor music teacher, packing bridal fineries of silks and pearls, and her husband—a splendidly endowed artist with a six-figured fortune—dissolved heart and hand at her feet. Now, in real life, how often does a poor music teacher who is twentyseven and not handsome, marry a brilliant genius with a man's adoring heart and ten thousand a year?

All story-tellers are so clever. They are world-artists and know upon which points to dab their bright colors and they are not because it is to be the colors and they are not because it is to be the colors and they are not because it is to be the color and they are not because it is to be the color and they are not because it is to be the color and they are not because it is to be the color and they are not because it is to be a so that the color and they are not be a so that the color and they are not be a so that they are not be a points to dab their bright colors and they dab freely. They are, perhaps, wise in shunning the sombre, monotonous plains and the deep unrelieved shades of life.

Most of us have enough of sameness and shadow in our lives, and in the celestial regions of fancy it may be quite as well to dwell upon the "high lights." Let that true love, which never runs smooth, culminate at last before the altar. Let all maidens be beautiful and altar. Let all maidens be beautiful and heroic and becomingly dressed; and all lovers be noble and rich, and prepossessing geniuses! Only it is a bit amusing to see how systematically our story-tellers—and the best in the land they are, too-go to work at their heroes. I presume a great many readers have noticed how romances, at the present day, run to governesses. At an earlier period sewing girls were very popular, until the practical and unromantic sewing mahine robbed them of their interesting halo. But the governess remains, and if you commence a story and come at once upon a "governess," look at her well. She is the heroine. She is not handsome oh no!-but she has such graceful figure, such a clear and varying complexion, such a wealth of hair, such a rare, sweet smile, and ah! such eyesthat the beholder forgets her lack of beauty in the dreadful hold she has at once taken upon his heart. The governess is invariably abused and maligned by some naughty beauty in the household of her employer, but this governess never loses her quiet dignity or her temper. She perhaps grows a shade paler and those wonderful eyes shed secret tears, which makes her still more interesting; but she triumphs at last over all cruel plots and masked batteries, marries Sir Edward and leaves the maligning Beauty crushing her curls and stamping her regal feet in bitter chagrin. In the present instance the governess is a music-teacher, which amounts to the same thing. She supports her father by giving lessons. They are poor, very poor, but poverty in romances means being reduced to a two-story cottage with a fine garden, a cow for cream, and a faithful old servant who conveys messages, makes fires, scours the front steps, and performs all duties that would be very unromantic in a heroin to do, however deeply reduced in circumstances. They are very poor, but Esther is always pretty sumptuously clad in black silk with a crimson scarf or red roses or scarlet geran ums mingled artistically in her toilet; and though she isn't strictly beautiful either, she sprains her ankle one blissful day, and does not go to give any lessons, but reclines in an easy chair, and the light coming through the cheerful crimson curtains of the library windows flings such warm lights to her waving hair and dark eyes, that our disguised artist, who boards here, plumps down beside her and makes known the sentiments that have long flourished beneath his panting blouse. Will she be his wife, to be tenderly cared for forever? She will. The poor music teacher, in a delirium of love, magnanimity, crimson light and sprained ankle, accepts with flushed and tearful joy the poor artist.

If his pictures do not sell she will take more pupils and take care of him, too! She will be delighted. The masquerading Claude, unable to masquerade longer, at once beams forth in his natural radiance of ten thousand a year, and the curtain drops upon pearls and silks, with the ancient father and the old servant smothered in greenbacks.

If we were to draw our ideas of life from these dear sumptuous writers, I think the inducements for young wo-men to turn governesses would be overpowering. From the days of "Jane Eyre" down to the last "Atlantic" they invariably bring about the most bril-

But there are some writers, "The Author of Life in the Iron Mills," for instance, who use their "high lights" sparingly, yet whose creations take deep hold of the heart. This author belongs to a type that has not as yet many followers, wielding a close, stern, merciless pen, with a few vivid terse strokes giving forth a picture that lives in the memory forever, probing hard cruel actualities, awing the reader with weird revelations, and not too grand a pen to deal lovingly and pityingly with the

NEWFOUNDLAND—Cape Race and Cape Pine Lights
—The Governor of Newfoundland having called the attention of the Board of Trade to the circumstance that mesters of trading vessels had been misled by a statement made in Blunt's Coast Pilot, published in Augus last, describing the lights at Cape Race and Cape Pine as they are intended to be according to the description given in the preliminary notice issued in June, 1885, but which alterations, owing to unforcesen circumstances, have not yet taken place, mariners are hereby informed that due nodec will be given of the actual charge of the present fixed light at Cape Race to a revolving one, and of the present revolving light at Cape Pine, when it is known at what time these changes can be effected.

when all others prove ineff-ciual.

The Rev. JACOB SECHLER, of Hanover, Pa. Well known and much respected among the German population in this country, makes the following statement for the benefit of the afflicted.

DKAB SIRS—Having realized in my family import ant benefits from the use of your valuable preparation—Wistars's Salsam op Wild Cheers—it affords me pleasure to recommend it to the public. Some eight years ago one of my daughters seemed to be in a decline, and little hopes of her recovery were enter tained. I then procured a bottle of your excilent Balsam, and before she had taken the whole of the contents of the bottle there was a great improvement in b-r health. I have, in my individual case made frequent use of your valuable medicine, and have always been benefited by it.
