The authorities at Harrisburg are The Richmond Examiner, which, taking measures for preserving the flags carried by the regiments of Pennsylvania like most other organs of Southern sentiment and feeling, seems to be laboring volunteers during the late civil war. A letter from Harrisburg to the Franklin under the impression that the city of Washington is in the hands of the rebels Repository says:--

"It is a proud record for our brave volun-teers that of the two. hundred and sixteen State flags given to them as they marched to meet the rebels, but four were lost in battle. One man still living carried one of these they three thousand miles on -that Jeff. Davis is enthroned at the White House, and that General Grant is a prisoner at Charleston, has been suppressed. The said suppression was by battle. One man still living carried one of these flags over three thousand miles on foot. As soon as all the regiments shall have returned, the flags will be returned to the State by their brave defenders with aporder of Gen. Grant, the General remarking that the newspapers in the South were doing more to hinder the propriate ceremonies. Most of them are tattered to ribbons, and some of them have work of reconstruction, by keepingalive the spirit of hatred between the two but a few fragments left. They have been riddled in battle and worn in the service sections, than all the politicians in the land put together, and hinting that he until many of them could not be recognized as flags; but they will be treasured as sacred monuments of the unrivaled heroism of the defenders of the Republic." had determined to stop the publication of such treasonable sheets. The General might have gone further, and have That only four of these flags should

THE REGULAR OFFICERS. It was inevitable, at the close of the war, when the army had to be reduced, that many distinguished officers should be mustered out of service. The selection of those to be mustered out was a difficult and delicate business, and no human being could be expected to make such selection to the satisfaction of every one. But the re-organization of the regular army, which must be effected by the present Congress, will afford an opportunity of doing some justice to many of the eminent officers who have been reduced from the rank, emoluments and responsibilities of high commands, to subaltern positions. We know of a number of major-generals and brigadier generals of volunteers, who have done noble service, who are reduced, by the mustering-out process, to the rank of majors, captains and even lieutenants in the regular army. We know of one major-general, who was in scores of engagements, who was badly wounded in two of them, who commanded an army corps during Grant's last splendid campaign, and who was one of the three selected to arrange the surrender of Lee's army, who is now only a captain.

This is only an illustration, and it is not cited as a special appeal in a particular case. There are many other cases of almost equal hardship, and our object is to urge that, in re-organizing the army, a board or a commission should be created for the purpose of selecting for the high grades those of the most distinguished regular officers who, by the sweeping muster-out, have been reduced to subordinate positions. Many of them are now ranked by men who were beneath them during the war and who do not pretend to have rendered as important service. All of them find their pay, in the present condition of prices, wholly inadequate to their support. Their case is much harder than that of the volunteer officers, for the latter have their old professions to fall back upon, while the regulars have been educated solely for the business of the soldier, and are, in most cases, too old to begin the study of a new profession. The war has so thoroughly tested the qualities of all the officers, that there ought to be no difficulty in deciding who were meritorious. If those who object to West Point are able to point out some men who were poor officers, there is a long list of honorable dead, and a longer one of honorable living, to prove that it has been invaluable to the country. These heroes of the regular army have a claim upon the nation, which should not be overlooked, and we trust that the present Congress will make such provirepublic, at least, is not ungrateful.

de Luxembourg, where she is staying. They broke the glass of her carriage, they jumped up the steps; they almost crushed themselves under the wheels, while the air resounded with 'vivas' and 'hurrahs.' Patti's hat, in the squabble, was torn off, and the crowd fought over its fragments for keepsakes."

in describing the demonstration, says:

"We can hardly describe the frantic joy with which she was received. Since the time of Jenny Lind in America, nothing great songstress at the entrance to the thea-mainspring of their action lies.

Upon the whole, we think the French rather made donkies of themselves on the occasion described. It may be very gratifying for a professional singer to receive popular applause; but when it comes to smashing her carriage windows, making a sort of a car of Juggernaut of it by getting under its wheels, and finally tearing the young woman's hat to pieces, we submit that it is a little rough. We congratulate Miss Patti that no more of her wearing apparel fell in the way of her enthusiastic admirers, or she might have been left to reach her hotel barebacked as well as bare-headed. The Frenchmen were too admiring by half.

THE REAL ESTATE TAX.

Thanks to the Legislature for the good work just effected. The taxes on real estate in Pennsylvania, for State purposes, except the special half mill tax, are abolished. The bill, which had passed the House previously, was passed unanimously by the Senate yesterday. Any deficiency in the revenue which might result, is more than made up by moderate taxes on bank stocks and on the gross receipts of railroad, canal and transportation companies. Even with the real estate tax removed, the revenue of the State will largely exceed the expenditures, and the reduction of the State debt will still go on steadily. Population and wealth are increasing rapidly in Pennsylvania and the State's resources are multiplying every year. We may look forward to a day, in the life time of the most of us, when there will be no necessity for a State tax to be collected directly from the citizens. The revenue of the State in 1865, from sources other than the tax on real and personal estate, was $4,260,783. This will be largely exceeded this year, while the expenditures of the State, owing to the restoration of peace and the reduction of interest on the public debt, will be diminished. The repeal of the real-estate tax will relieve the people of Philadelphia of an annual payment of three or four hundred thousand dollars. This is especially important in view of the heavy taxes we have to pay for national and municipal purposes.

German Opera.

On Monday evening, the 26th inst., Mr. Grover will open the Academy of Music for a season of German Opera. We are promised some new artists, and an increase of the chorus by the addition of members selected from the Wiesbaden opera. Additions to the repertoire are also hinted at. and the acquisition of the "Esmeralda wardrobe" is announced. This means, we presume, the extensive lot of good dresses procured for the production of Mr. Fry's opera of Notre Dame of Paris, nearly two years ago. If the promises of the manager are fulfilled, as we believe they will be, we sion for them as will show that this | may expect a very brilliant and successfu
