EVENING BULLETIN. WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1866.

THE 22d OF FEBRUARY. Although there is to be no genera elebration of Washington's birthday its recurrence, to-morrow, is sure to awaken patriotic emotions. The memory of the Father of his Country is cherished with an affection that shows no abatement, and this, the first of the birthdays since the re-establishment of the Union to create which he devoted his life, ought to be observed with solemn thankfulness by all patriots. True men will, almost unconsciously, associate Abraham Lincoln, the Saviour of the country, with that of its Father. Their birthdays recur at almost the same date, for Washington was born February 11th, old style, and Lincoln February 12th, new style. One year ago Lincoln was still engaged in the gigantic work of saving the Union, and he finished it in a few weeks afterwards, falling by the assassin's hands just as he witnessed its completion. Let us have to-morrow a general display of flags in honor of the day, and let us again resolve, that whatever violations of the will of the people may be attempted, the people will still be true to the republican principles to which Washington and Lincoln devoted

THE BOLTING SENATORS.

The feeling of security with which the people rested upon Congress to maintain the principles upon which the great battle of the Union has been fought, was rudely broken up last night, by the announcement that the friends of the Union had failed to secure the two-thirds vote requisite to pass the Freedmen's Bill over the Presidential veto. To effect this result six Republican Senators, who had voted for the bill on its original passage, deserted their friends and voted with the opposition minority, leaving the Union majority barely short of the required vote. The six Senators who have thus assumed the grave responsibility of leaving the new-made freedmen to work out their own salvation, without the protecting arm of the United States Government, are:

NORTON, Minn., DIXON, Conn. DOOLITTLE, Wis., STEWART, Nevada. MORGAN, N. Y., WILLEY, W.Va. The position of these gentlemen is vote, so far stultified himself as to say that while he did not endorse the President's views, he believed the bill unconstitutional. That is to say, Mr. liberately voted for an unconstitutional Willey convicts himself of having debill, an admission that few United States Senators have ever been willing publicly to make. : Whether this confession of Mr. Willey's disregard for his Senatorial oath, as exhibited by his vote on the passage of the bill, which he says was contrary to the Constitution, is to be taken as the apology for his five colleagues, we know not. And yet we are at a loss to conceive of any other reason that will justify men of such precedents and position in thus ignoring their own solemn oath. That which was right and true on the 25th of January, was right and true on the 20th of February, and it will need a more cunning sophistry than these Senators are masters of, to save them from the reprobation which their course has in-

With regard to Mr. Cowan, of this State, little need be said. He was not present on the original passage of the have named. But his position is even far from every principle which he once avowed that he is no longer counted in the ranks of the Union members of Congress. For a long time Mr. Cowan has proved himself utterly recreant to the high trusts which loyal Pennsylvania placed in his hands, and has now reached the stage of hopeless indifference to the contempt in which he is held throughout the length and breadth of the State which he betrays and misrepresents. Mr. Nesmith, the remaining Republican Senator, who has abandoned his friends in the hour of need, has made a curious record for himself. On the 18th of January last he delivered a speech in the Senate on the appointment of provisional Governors, and took occasion to define his general position on national affairs, especially with regard to the negroes. In the course of his remarks he said:

"I think, sir, I can say, with Paul, that 'We have fought a good fight.' We are not entirely through with it, I admit, as he was, and we may have a little further to go was, and we may have a material and the same direction, but our path is, fortunately, easier than it has been.

I do not want eternally to be fighting over this question of slavery and distinctions among the rights and privileges of the American people.

among the rights and privileges of the American people.

"Now, sir, I say to President Johnson, to the Democratic party, and to the people of the United States, that I never will yield this controversy until all men in America shall stand upon an equal footing—equal before the law in every respect. When they will fix it so that that can be done, I will give up the controversy in which I have been engaged for so many years, and no man will rejoice more than I that I have been relieved from it."

Mr. Nesmith may be able to reconcile his words and his deeds, but we do not quite see how it is to be done.

The best that can be said for these belting Senators is that they have been betrayed into an, act of deplorable weakness, the consequences of which cannot now be estimated. Upon some of them we have relied with an absolute confidence, believing that the great interests of freedom were secure in their hands. Our disappointment is in proportion to our confidence, but our fear of the consequences of their course yesterday has regard to the whole question of restoring peace and prosperity to our country and of protecting the helpless and friendless race who have nothing to look to for the future apart from the provision which Congress has sought to make for them, and which the President and these Republican Senators have denied to them.

The Senate yesterday practically abolished the Freedmen's Bureau and handed its subjects over to the tender mercies of their old masters and their worse enemies, the poor whites of the South. The jurisdiction under the original bill expires within one year after the close of the war, and after that-will Senator Doolittle or any of his comfrères tell us what after that?

THE OTHER SIDE. It is an old truism that "there are two sides to every question," and in fact it cannot be denied that, looking at all questions as men do, from various points of view, there are many sides to most of the propositions about which they dispute. Let us then look at a few of the positions assumed by some of our weekly Solomons of the press, in which we read plausible argument, and also hear strong animadoersions in the social

Fashions are not always follies: even the hoop-skirts have their advantages. Some unfortunate old man, being partially blind, gets his foot entangled in a lady's hoop, falls and breaks his leg. The fault is not in the skirt, but in the old man, who, if he cannot walk the streets without putting his clumsy foot in the wrong place, should have a nurse to guide his steps, or walk in less frequented streets, or stay at home. Fashionable Dinners may be bores and very fatiguing to invalids without good digestions, and giving such dinners may be oppressive to those that cannot afford it. But these exceptions do not take away from the merit and pleasure of an elegant hospitality, where guests and friends enjoy the selves, and have the sense to not get sick by foolish excesses. The expenditure of money for such feasts is a liberal encouragement of various trades, and of such useful artists as Augustin, disbursing from abundant means for the benefit of others. Nor does it follow that gout or colick, sick head-ache, pimples or blotches, are the penalties that must be suffered. These certainly a most unenviable one. One ills as often come from the need of of them, Mr. Willey, before casting his good dishes and their consequent good blood. Possibly our young people of the present day and generation may not be equal in high virtues to those of the past, when a limited population, which the approximation that steam has given us to Europe, did not find imitations and temptations so abundant. But it is not in the jostling crowd on the payments of Chestnut street and Broadway that we are to seek true specimens of "our young ladies." Heaven be praised, we have hosts of good and bright characters that are not to be stared at on these streets for idle or brazen promenade, but are only seen there when proper objects require it, and who are refined ladies in dress and in deportment wherever they

There are railers who love to find fault with every thing, and who will only see things from their own point view; peevish and cynical tempers that fret and groan over the pleasures of others, and who, unwilling or unable to enjoy themselves according to the times and the country they live in, severely condemn others and what they do not bill and therefore escapes the peculiar understand. There are many other dilemma of the six Senators whom we phases under which these growlers show worse than theirs, for he has drifted so them, and we may chance again to look at "the other side."

PAREJA'S SUICIDE. The war begun by Spain upon Chile was wanton and unprovoked. The complaints made of the Chilean people and government were of the most puerile and trivial character. Señor Tavira, Minister of Spain at Santiago, in May 1865, had accepted the explanations of the Chilean Foreign Minister, and an interchange of notes passed in which each congratulated the other on the preservation of peace between the two countries. But this settlement was rejected by Spain. Tavira was recalled and Admiral Pareja arrived in September with his fleet, instructed to renew the demands for humiliating concessions by Chile, which, not being granted, the war began.

Pareja's disaster, in the loss of the Covadonga, added to distress at having been the agent in precipitating the war, preyed upon his mind, and he shot himself. We now hear that before his death he wrote a letter to a friend in Europe, in which he confessed that he had misled the Government, that he was unjust and prejudiced against Tavira, who knew the republic better than he did, and that it was the interest of Spain to embrace the first moment to make peace with Chile. It is not often that in public affairs such revelations as these are made by conscience-stricken public men, and it is, we think, unprecedented that remorse should drive a soldier obeying orders to suicide. Pareja's case must make the war begun by Spain more unpopular than ever, and joined with other circumstances, we hope it may make Queen Isabella's ministers desist from its further prosecution.

THE LOYAL LEGION. To-morrow at noon the first public demonstration of the new Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States will take place at the Academy of Music. The objects of this organization have been fully set forth in these columns already. Briefly, it is to perpetuate the memories of the late war among those who participated in it, and their descendants. It corresponds, in its main features, with the order of the Cincinnati. Already a large number of distinguished army and navy officers have been enrolled in it, and many of them will be present to-morrow at the Academy. The ceremonies promise to be novel and interesting, and a very brilliant assemblage of military and civilians is expected.

THE GOVERNORSHIP. The endeavor to figure out a majority of delegates to the forthcoming Union State Convention in favor of any one man for Governor is very unwise. A great many counties that are included in the so-called statistics have not yet elected delegates, and in some that have osen, they are known to be of opposite views to those stated. People must not be misled by any such estimates as have appeared. John B. Myers & Co., Auctioneers, Nos. 272 and 224 "Market street, will hold on to-morrow. (Thursday), February 22, at 10 o'clock, by catalogue, on four mounts' credit.
